GROCERS ALLOWED HEARING RIGHTS IN PACKER CASE

Washington, November 5 .- (By the Associated Press.)-Permission to intervene in the packer divorce ment case, was granted the National Wholesale Grocers' association to day, by Justice Stafford, of the District of Columbia supreme court. The court recently denied a mo tion of the government to strike out an order permitting the Southern Wholesale Grocers' association to intervene, but did not act at that time, on the application of the national association. The intervention granted today, the court asserted, was for the same purpose, and to the same extent as allowed the southern association, merely to be heard in opposition to any proposed change in the decree divorcing the packers from non-allied industries, which would deprive the wholesale grocers of the protection new obtained by that decree.

Atlanta, November 5, 1921.

Hon. James L. Key, City.

My Dear Mayor Key: Several months ago you requested me to investigate the site for a municipal market in the block surrounded by Ivy, Glimer, Courtiand and Decatur streets, as the expert whom you brought here from the north to survey the city for the location of the market decided on that block.

Being familiar with the property, I had blue prints made, secured prices and submitted them to you. In the meantime I investigated a number of other possible sites. This I did as a real estate agent.

During our first conference you suggested that I could do no better work than to co-operate with the Woman's club to secure a municipal market and also asked me to co-operate with the Woman's club to secure is municipal market and also asked me to refer the matter to the Civitan club and enlist its services in this work. This I did, as you know, and put in a great deal of hard work in connection with the entire transaction.

COTTON CORPORATION READY FOR BUSINESS

New Organization Is Headed by Former Governor Hugh M. Dorsey.

With the opening of offices in its own building the Georgia Cotton Trust corporation is now ready for business, and Georgia farmers will find themselves this year in a position to finance their cotton crops through their own home corporation, it was announced Saturday. Former Governor Hugh M. Dorsey is president of the corporation.

The corporation is authorized to do a geneal trust business, but is designed particularly for handling cotton. It has opened its offices on the property at the corner of Ivy street and Exchange place, which it recently purchased. This location is close to the cotton exchange, the offices of cotton brokers and the cotton warehouses. Some time ago the corporation purchased the property it is now occupying with two things in view, it was announced. In a short time it is planned to erect on the site a seven-story cotton banking building and also to provide a cotton office building. The property purchased was selected for its proximity to the cotton center of the city and in the heart of what is known as Atlanta's "cotton row."

Shareholders in the corporation live in all parts of Georgia, and among them are bankers, farmers, business men and professional men. W. J. Kinnett and R. M. Cobb, Jr., are in charge of the offices.

Definite plans have been made with the idea of securing a large representation of every retail trade line Atlanta during the next year which, no doubt, will at least double he present membership. The opportunity school, conducted at Auburn avenue and Pryor street, is more and more receiving the com-mendation and support of the retail merchants, on account of the very efficient work being done by the school in the interest of those em ployed in the retail stores. The chool is supported entirely from state funds, and is a part of the public school system. It teaches merhandising, salesmanship, stenog raphy, typewriting and office methods, free of charge, to those employees in the retail stores who are willing to give up a short period of time every day to improving their business education. The retail merchants are co-operating with the work of the school in allowing their employees to take part of their working time for the purpose outlined above. The school emphasizes the importance of service to the buying public of Atlanta, and there is no doubt that a very substantial improvement in the service retail store employees are capable of rendering ustomers will be evident during the next few years.

The Greatest Musical Instrument in the World

This Magic Piano (so far beyond the ordinary player piano) Is So Wonderful That It Is Difficult To Realize Its Uncanny Powers And Its Inspiring Influence In Bringing Music Into The Home

It brings to its fortunate owner, music in its most beautiful form, exquisitely played by the greatest artists of the world-everything from the lilting melody of a Broadway Operetta to the immortal melodies of Beethoven and Chopin-to be heard at your pleasure in the comfort and seclusion of your own fireside. Such pianists as Rachmaninoff, Moiseiwitsch, Mirovitch, the great master Godowsky, the youthful genius Levitzki-indeed practically all the great figures in the musical world today-are perpetually "yours to command" through the magic of the wonderful Ampico.

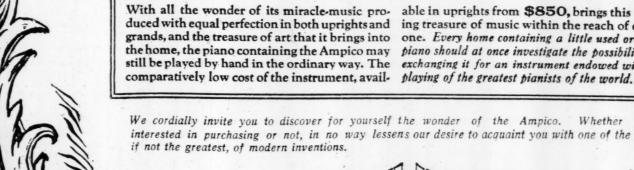

They will play exclusive concerts for you.

They will provide the most cultural and inspiring force in the education of your children.

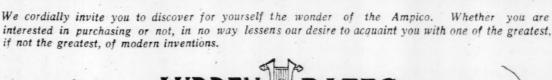

Masters of popular music of the day will play exquisite rhythmic numbers for you and your guests.

And remember, it is the actual playing of these artists that you hear. True, it is secured through the medium of their scientific recordings, but it is their personal playing nevertheless, imparted through the actual keys, strings and tones of your piano, just as it the artist himself were seated at the instrument playing in person.

Will Conference Discuss Important Money Questions?

BY R. L. BARNUM

New York, November 5.-With the Arms Limitation conference now only one week off, there is a great deal of discussion in banking circles here as to whether or not three financial subjects will come up at the forthcoming meeting, general cancellation among the adies of war debts, a plan for stabilizing foreign exchange, the granting of long-term credits that will permit war-ridden Europe to get on its feet financially and industrially. These three subjects, especially the first one named, are being discussed in Wall street, before and after directors' meetings, and at every informal conferences of bankers.

Your correspondent has made a round of the financial district, ask-ing for views and finds a sharp conflict of opinion, first as to whether these subjects are likely to come up at the Arms Limitation conference, and next as to what should be the attitude of this country if these subjects do come up for discussion. Those who believe that the Arms Limitation conference will stick to the program already announced are being influence by what is heard from Washington. It may be stated as a fact that President Harding, Secretary Hughes and other influential members of the administration are strongly against bringing up for discussion any so-called outside financial subjects. But, on the other hand, those who hold opposite views are pointing out that we will only be one of many at the conference, that some of the countries to be represented are known to favor cancellation of war debts, that this question will certainly come up for discussion at many informal conferences from the very beginning. Hence, it is considered possible that before the end this informal discussion will lead to formal dicussion.

Stocks Did a Little of

Everything, Says Platt

BY C. H. PLATT

New York, November 5 .- (Special.) - The stock market did a lit tle of everything in the past week, with some periods of genera weakness and severe decline in a few stocks and other times of general strength and very big advances in a few issues. The general tone was strong, however, and even the few stocks that had their short periods of weakness saw good recoveries before the week was over.

The settlement of the railroad strike started a heavy buying movement, with the public coming into the market for the first time in over a month on a big scale. It was the first time in many weeks that those who had bought during the strike crisis found sufficient mand for stocks to be able to sell them and take a profit, hence after the first big bulges due to public buying, this profit taking coninued and general lowering of quotations resulted, but there was an improving demands for stocks at the lower levels, with many people waiting for reactions before buying, and as a result, the market prepared for a general rally when the easing in money rates and lowering of the federal reserve bank rediscount rates were announced.

This had an immediate stimulating effect on securities and offset the strike in the coal mines and the unfavorable influence of further weakness in German marks. The investment markets were extremely strong as a result of the improvement in the money situation, and it is almost a 100 per cent rule that after there have been periods of great activity and strength in distinctly investment issues that bull markets follow in the near future in the mose speculative issues.

There have been many indications for sometime that the market is shaping up for some sustained strength, but one thing or another Wilson & Co. cv. 6s has delayed heavy public buying of stocks. There are indications Average Bale that this is at hand, however, and that increasing volume will be the rule in the near future, unless something new comes up to scare away the timid outside buyer.

Otherwise there was very little support and later fluctuations were irregular with December ranging from 18.30 to 18.50, and March from 18.07 to 18.22.

Last prices were within 2 or 3 points of the best on most deliveries. Week-end reviews of the goods situation attracted no special comment, but there was probably some selling on reports that Lancashire spinners would discuss a renewal of organized short time should business fail to improve in the near future. ON COTTON SITUATION

New York, November 5.—(Special.)—The early trading was confined to commission houses and trade buying with local selling causing the market to advance a few points over last night's close. We wish to call your attention to exports to Japan which points to trade revival in the eastern countries. Japan is not only supplying her domestic needs, but she has opened up a new channel of trade in Siberis. Previous to this time, Moscow and Lodz supplied the needs of this country, but owing to the financial condition of these cities at this time, Japan has stepped in and opened up the trade relations with Siberia which hitherto she had little or no business dealings with.

altherto she had little or no business dealings with.

We engerly await the ginning figures of November 9, which will confirm the opinion of the government that a large percentage of the crop has already been ginned. The figures on spinners' takings are most favorable indicating more activity in the trade and a revival in business. We expect the market to improve.

Chicago, November 5 .- Grain prices fluctuated on the board of trade today, but with less disposition to press the selling side in wheat, a steadier undertone de-Wheat registered a net gain of 1-8, corn closed unchanged to 1-8 lower, and oats finished 1-4 higher; provisions gained from 2 to 21-2, the latter in November

Wheat started easy and lower under some scattered selling. After the first hour, however, this movement was played out. Prices turned upward on word that 1,500,000 bushels had been worked for export and reports that Winnipeg had absorbed early offerings.

The trade shifted a bit when rumors of frost in Argentina were denied, but short covering and the conventional week-end transactions caused another upturn at the close. Corn and oats alternately sagged and stiffened in sympathy with wheat. Domestic shipping demand was slow in both grains, but spot offerings were readily absorbed. Provisions were unusually dull, but prices were steady because of the strength in live hogs at the yards and reports of liberal export sales of lard for European account. CHICAGO QUOTATIONS. The following were the ruling quotation the exchange Saturday: Open, High, Low. Close, Close, Dec. 1.01 1.02 1.00½ 1.01½ 1.01 May . . . 1.05¾ 1.07 1.05¼ 1.06⅓ 1.06 CORN—

Vanderbilt came to Birmingham with a stonewall defense and a fast and driving backfield, and University of Alabama could do little against their Tennessee opponents, osing the game by a 14 to 0 score. Vanderbilt scored early in the first quarter, when the Commodores tak-ng the ball in the middle of the two downs, and then sprang a ng forward pass, Neely to McCulugh, netting 25 yards. Neely then pped off 18 yards over left tackle, and Godchaux and Bomar made the nine yards necessary to score between them. Smith cicked goal.

The Crimsons tightened up after game was nip and tuck until late football was used. in the final quarter, when Doc Kuhn, first-string quarterback of the Commodores who didn't start the game on account of injuries, was sent in and supplied the punch necessary to put across a score. The Commolores had again taken the ball in the middle of the field on a punt. Several line bucks, with Neely's 20yard run around right end and a 25yard pass, Kuhn to McCullough, netted the score. Smith again kicked the goal.

Alabama threatened to score only nce, when she worked the ball to Vanderbilt's 18-yard line. The Commodores held, and an attempted pass was grounded, and Vanderbilt took the ball. Neely's brilliant offensive work was a feature of the game. while the Crimsons' game fight to Charleston, W. Va., November 5.- hold down the score added color to

Federal's Financial Strength Produces a Better Truck at 1914 Prices

How does Federal do it? How can they afford to sell such a truck as Federal at such a low price?

Simply because Federal's sound, conservative financial policy preserved it from the mistake of over-expansion during the frenzied war period.

Federal has no ruinous overhead burden.

Federal has no bonded indebtedness, no preferred stock, no bank obligations of any kind, no interest burdens to be passed on to truck buyers in the form of high prices.

Federal is free from financial entanglements and therefore Federal buyers are free from high prices.

Federal offers to truck buyers today a better truck at 1914 prices, a truck of highest quality with all the present day refinements, a truck selling at a lower price then any other truck of equal serviceability. $75,000,000 worth of Federal trucks running. Think It Over!

The Constitution pathfinder party left Atlanta October 29, using the official pathfinder—a Single Six Packard, especially equipped to insure accuracy, shown above. Every mile of this road was driven and carefully logged in both directions by two representatives of The Constitution and Loftus T. Jones, a well-known insurance man, associated with J. C. Carson company.

With the Packard pathfinder it was possible to make excellent time over the entire trip, the roads from Atlanta to Waycross permitting speed in excess of the legal limit. From Waycross to Jack-sonville there was a bad detour of a little more than fifteen miles, through very bad sand and many close turns between trees, but the sturdy little pathfinder took even this bad spot at a good speed, and came through the long grind without so much as a squeak or rattle. the detour ended and after passing Folkston, about fifteen miles of bad sand was encountered. The Single Six Packard on this trip proved its worthiness of the Packard name, and, as one member of the party expressed it, "It clipped off the miles like a fast train, and ploughed through the sand unfalteringly."

ENGINES MEET: CAR OF COTTON IS DESTROYED

A road engine and a switch engine on the A., B. & A. railroad ran together Saturday afternoon. The collision occurred about a quarter of a mile below the Bellwood avenue yards. A fireman received a gash over his eye, but was not seriously injured. The others of the crew jumped to safety. A carload of cotton behind the road engine was completely destroyed. The cause of the wreck was not learned.

REBUILT FRANKLIN AUTOMOBILES

WHEN we say rebuilt, we mean all that the word implies. We do not mean that a car is merely "dolled up" for sale. Of course, we make them look like new, but the real heart of a car is the motor and other mechanical parts - parts which you cannot see, that you 1919 Dodge Brothers Roadster. have to accept largely on your faith 1919 Dodge Brothers Roadster. in the concern from whom you buy used-car. It is on the mechanical parts of our cars that we use extra precautions to see that they are as nearly perfect as it is possible to make them. We spare no necessary expense to obtain this end. Therein lies the value of our rebuilt cars. This is why we are willing to guarantee our rebuilt cars for a period of three months. This is why men who know cars have bought rebuilt Franklin cars in preference to a new car at about the same price. Many of our most satisfied owners are driving rebuilt Franklins. We have the following on hand at the present time:

1 1920 Sedan. 1 1919 Sedan. 1 1920 Touring.

1 1919 Touring. OTHER MAKES:

1 1920 5-passenger Buick 1 1920 Hudson Sport Sedan. $1,750

he Strand on Monday, Tuesday and ing over the two hundred mark. A perfect specimen of a man and in his fast-moving pictures gives an entertainment that surpasses any of the medium so-called westerns that are now on the market. The story of "The Broadway Buckaroo" deals with the carefree son, who, after having been driven from home by his father for one of his escapades in New York, seeks a real change by landing in a small burg in southern Montana. There he finds that the western plains are not as bad as painted by many, for after se-curing a position as a cowpuncher on a ranch, he also secures the attention of the ranch owner's pretty daughter as well as the enmity of a former admirer who from the very moment of his arrival plans his downfall. There are many incidents of real excitement and an exceptionally thrilling scene is shown when a terrific fight occurs between the two rivals on the brink of a cliff. There is some wonderful riding and some very thrilling bits of action in each of the six reels.

Famous Dog Actor.

He's just a dog and his name is Pal, but for all that he is one of the most talented actors on the screen today.

No less an authority than Cecil B. DeMille, Paramount director, recently paid tribute to Pal's ability as an actor. The dog plays an important part in the story of "Fool's Paradise," the most recent DeMille production for Paramount.

"That dog has more real ability than a number of human beings who think they are potential screen stars," said Mr. DeMille. "He obeys nstantly, does what is required of him, and does it well-and he never

"That's more than I can say for ome actors. Pal is never sensitive about this place before the camera; matters of wardrobe, makeup and lighting do not bother him or his work. He is always willing and always ready."

Pal appears in numerous scenes with Dorothy Dalton, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Kosloff, Clarence Burton and George Fields. In the story, the dog is the property of the character portrayed by Conrad Nagel. When this character is temporarily blinded. Pal takes upon himself the duties of piloting his blind master.

"Fool's Paradise" boasts of a remarkable all-star cast which includes Dorothy Dalton, Mildred Har-ris, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Kosloff, John Davidson, Julia Faye, Clarence Burton, George Fields, Jacqueline Negri, the famous Polish actress, Logan, Kamuela Searles and other notable players. The story was written by Beulah Marie Dix and first release will be "The Last Pay-Sada Cowan, suggested by Leonard scheduled in December. The Merrick's story, "The Laurels and ther. Dueling Pistols.

Director Edward Jose has discovered a historic pair of dueling pistols which he has borrowed for the dueling scene in "The Prodigal Judge." Everybody who has read Vaughan Kester's famous novel of that tile can not fail to remember the great climax of the pistol fight between the judge and Colonel Fenteress. The guns which Mr. Jose has unearthed once belonged to President Andrew Jackson, and were used by the founder of the spoils system in his terrible duel with Dickinson. On that occasion both the weapons drew blood. Jackson, who was a slow shot, determined to let his opor that occasion both the weapons drew blood. Jackson, who was a slow shot, determined to let his opponent fire first and then mark him down. It was a terrible risk, because Dickinson was considered one of the finest shots in Tennessee. But when the signal was given, Dickinson fired and Jackson stood apparemently unharmed.

OUTCLASSING ALL OTHERS

Here Are the Experts Who Will Cover The Disarmament Conference for

THE CONSTITUTION

Frank H. Simonds — Sir Philip Gibbs — James A. Hollomon — Ida M. Tarbell

From International Point of View

FRANK H. SIMONDS will interpret and analyze the deliberations and developments of the conference with a knowledge and authority that no one else can approach

With the background of his past performances as the greatest of war analysts, as the keenest and most prophetic of American journalists at the peace conference, and as America's most competent interpreter of the shifting maze of world politics since the war, Frank Simonds is in a class by himself.

JAMES A. HOLLOMON

Effect at Home and Abroad

AS IT EFFECTS EUROPE—Sir Philip Gibbs is universally conceded to be the greatest of war correspondents of all time and the one master interpreter of the soul of the great war. He will report from England and the rest of Europe the reactions of the man in the street, the woman in the home and all humanity to the efforts of the conference. Sir Philip is now in the center of Russia, but his return to England is expected before the beginning of the conference.

FROM THE AMERICAN ANGLE—James A. Hollomon, for years the Washington correspondent of The Constitution, is too well known to readers of the paper to need any introduction. He will cover the conference primarily in a reportorial way, supplemented by a clear analysis, particularly of the part played by our own representatives.

View of Greatest Woman Journalist

IDA M. TARBELL, whose brilliant biographies of Napoleon and Lincoln are classics everywhere, and whose story of the Standard Oil precipitated the greatest reorganization and purification of business methods and standards in the history of America, will bring to bear on the conference her brilliant intellect, her sturdy and practical idealism, her knowledge of history, statesmen and statesmanship, with the same trenchant and always human pen that has electrified the nation and the world time and time again.

She will voice the ideals of womanhood for righteous and lasting peace with a conviction and fervor which will make her work outstanding and prophetic.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS and THE UNITED NEWS

'Augmented by a corps of Special Writers, Headed

by William Allen White

Following is the "line-up" of some of the best reporters in the country who will report the coming armament conference in Washington for The Constitution:

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE: Famous editor and publicist, who for years has been known as one of the greatest reporters and writers in the world on a big story. Mr. White is not going to the conference to write opinions. In a letter just received from White, completing arrangements for the assignment, he declares, "I want to go as a regular reporter." And William Allen White will be on the job for The Constitution, through the United News, as a reporter.

ROBERT J. BENDER: Recognized as one of the leading correspondents now writing out of Washington. Bender accompanied President Wilson to Paris for the Versailles conference. He forecast the calling of the impending conference a full month before official announcement of it was made by Secretary of State Hughes. Since then he has followed developments from day to day and may be relied upon to lead the field in telling of the work of the conference when it is under way.

FRED S. FERGUSON: Covered the Versailles peace conference after serving as war correspondent with the American army throughout the fighting in France. Ferguson scored many notable news beats from Paris during the Versailles negotiations and since that time has been in close touch with the affairs as they have moved toward the Washington conference.

WILLIAM SLAVENS M'NUTT: War correspondent and fourth member of the United News staff of writers with the background of experience in Europe. McNutt is a graphic writer. His gripping descriptive stories are familiar to readers of The Constitution. McNutt will bring the picture of the conference and the personalities direct to you.

JOHN M. GLEISSNER: Congressional correspondent of the Washington United News staff. Through long association with leaders of the senate and house through the various treaty fights, Gleissner is particularly well equipped for covering a story of such magnitude as the coming conference. Gleissner will deal especially with the reaction of our own law-making and treaty-ratifying bodies to the work of the conference.

Backing up the play abroad will be Ralph Turner, in London; Hudson Hawley, in Paris, as well as correspondents in Tokio, Rome and other capitals who will report on the reaction of the rest of the world to the news from Washington.

'OPEN DOOR' DOCTRINE IS CRUX OF DISARMAMENT CONFEREN

Hughes' Plan to Oppose Policies of Japanese Fraught With Danger

Disarmament Is Negligible Feature of Meeting, Says Simonds, Who Sees Grave Menace of War Unless Japan's Aims and America's Determination to Prevent Them Are Compromised.

BY FRANK H. SIMONDS

Washington, November 5.-In .1918, Mr. Wilson went to Paris armed with his famous fourteen points and determined to make these the basis for the creation of the league of nations. Today Mr. Hughes almost equally the master of American policy, enters a new world conference committed to three instead of fourteen points and resolved to make these the basis for a program of limitation of armaments.

The whole Washington conference, at least at the outset, will revolve around Mr. Hughes' three points. They represent the beginning, the middle and the end of the American policy. They may be succinctly stated as follows:

To re-establish the doctrine of the open door.

To obtain international recognition of the principle of the intethe country couldn't have had for love or money. Today in the countries where these delicacies are found at their best, there are experts selecting and packing the best of each crop, ready to send to the American housewife. That is the American ideal—to package found at their finest. Take the pineapple we were talking about, for instance: Months ago, in a great kitchen over in Hawaii that dessert was being prepared. Pineapples, fresh from the fields, were being sliced, cooked, put up in pure sugar syrup, and sealed in cans. Today they are on the shelves of the grocer, crisp and sweet as the day they were being taken in from the fields, still warm from the sun.

American Initiative.

Atlanta Manager Libby, McNeill & Libby.

"Johnny, run ap to the grocer's and get a can of pineapple," says mother. "We'll have some for dinher."

So Johnny runs up to the corner and fetches a can of pineapple—from Hawaii!

You've never thought of it in that way, probably, but it's true.
On almost every table in Atlanta tonight there will be foods and delicates that in olden times—even a few years ago—tae richest men in the fields, still warm from the sun.

American Initiative.

So, when Mother sends Johnny up to the grocer's for pineapple she practically sends him to Hawaii!
Now, with the winter months approaching. Atlanta housewives can ever that American initiative and invention have brought the gardens and orchards of the world to "just around the corner."

With fresh fruits growing scarce and sky-high in price, it is comforting to know that in California the wonderful cacles that in olden times—even a few years ago—tae richest men in the homes deprived of fresh fruits and vegetables two-thirds of the year. On the other hand, they saw great quantities of the juicy, luscious fruits of Hawaii and California, the firm fleshed salmon of Alaska, the wonderful products of Spansion of the corner."

With fresh fruits growing scarce and sky-high in price, it is comforting to know that in California the wonderful crops of asparagus and a useful business built up.

But here's where their troubles began. The process of hermetical gealing was practically unknown to the world—and they had very little. success, and the first canned product was placed on the market.
With increasing experience and facilities plants were built all over the globe in places where the world's choicest foods were found at their best, and thus, because of the practical working out of an American ideal, women of today can enjoy the best of the world's produce at any season of the year.

HOW BUYERS FROM ATLANTA CONCERNS ARE BEING SERVED

The great advantage enjoyed by Atlanta shippers on account of the strategic position of this city as distributing center is illustrated by a recent example of fast freight service rendered to the Liquid Carbonic company in connection with the shipment of a car of carbonic gas from Atlanta to Havana, Cuba. This car was forwarded from Atlanta on Southern railway freight train, No. 51, October 19. It was delivered to the Florida East Coast railway at Jacksonville on September 20, cleared from Key West on September 23, and arrived in Havana on September 24, the shipment being delivered to consignees in Havana on the fifth day out of

That looks like service with a large "S" and emphasizes not only the advantage which Atlanta concerns enjoy, but the advantage which buyers from Atlanta houses can count on these days when goods are being bought in smaller quantities than usual, but when immediate delivery has become so essential to present conditions.

Watching Buffalo.

Watching Buffalo.

The eyes of the industry this week are focused upon Buffalo, where the eastern regional exhibition of the supply organization is to be held. It will be interesting to watch developments at Buffalo. Although there will not be many southern delegates, it is expected that the Buffalo "show" will give a pretty good idea of how the southern exhibition will shape up.

According to Robert Everett, secretary-manager of the association of supply men, the Atlanta event will be a trade epoch. Mr. Everett bases his belief upon the fact that the south, with its long seasons favorable to ice cream consumption, offers greater promise for the development of this industry than any other section of the country.

There will be 126 booths at the exhibition in the Auditorium. Most of these already have been engaged by members of the supply organization and other leading manufacturers and distributors. They will exhibit every device known to the ice cream manufacturing industry— Pueblo cliff dwellers of New Mexico were originally buffalo hunting and nomadic Indians of western

The Bedding Industry in Atlanta

Vice President Southern Spring Bed Company

In 1883 J. B. Bryan made the first the world in which to manufacture woven wire spring ever manufacturided south of the Potomac river on the ground floor of a little store on Marietta street. It is conservatively estimated that about 300 ice cream manufacturers of the southeast will attend the annual convention of the Southern Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers, which will be held in connection with the southern regional exhibition of the Association of Ice Cream Supply Men, a national organization of firms supplying ice cream manufacturing equipment. In addition, reports indicate that a number of delegates will attend from Texas, Mississippi, Oklahoma and Missouri. Arkansas and Louislana are comprised in the southern association, and large delegations are expected from points in these states. The supply organization will furnish about 250 delegates.

There is promise of convention features galore. In addition to the southern association's program, there will be special meetings of the Tri-State Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers and the North Caroling Ice Cream Manufacturers as

Today-"Make That Dollar Work"

WHEN anyone talks con-structively on economy and profit, you are interested. You are interested because it shows ways to make that dollar work just that much harder.

A steel building fulfills your ideas of economy and profit. It's economical because it costs less, yet serves best. It's temporary or permanent as you wish. Temporary -because it can be transplanted easily and added to quickly. Permanent-because it is built well, strong and lasting. Yet it's of standard units. It's produced in quantities, therefore you benefit through price.

Don't be wasteful-but "make that dollar work"-make it produce more for you. Buy-buy what you need-buy to increase your range of operations—buy to profit more - buy to conserve what you have. Hydraulic Steel Buildings will really help you to make your dollars work harder.

A Sale of Armstrong's New Linoleums

"Rich Color Harmonies Are Possible With Linoleum"

TO THE "Five Hundred Club" and all others who contemplate building homes, as I well as those who have homes in course of construction, this sale of genuine Armstrong's (Circle A) Linoleum should be of intense interest. Aside from the comfort and luxury of Linoleum as a floor covering, the use of Armstrong's Linoleum means indefinite preservation of the floors. The comprehensive line of patterns included in this sale makes it possible to cover every room in the house with an appropriate and harmonious pattern. The colors are just as varied.

Your old floors will be like new if covered with Linoleum. Linoleum makes heavy, air-tight warm floors of thin, bare, cold floors. Linoleum-covered floors help hold the heat in the room and make less fuel heat necessary.

SALE PRICES ARE AS FOLLOWS:

All Printed Linoleum that sells regularly for $1.50 a square yard, is offered in this sale at $1.25 Square Yard

All Printed Linoleum that sells regularly for $1.65 a square yard, is offered in this sale at $1.35 Square Yard

All Inlaid Linoleum that sells regularly for $2.15 a square yard, is offered in this sale at $1.75 Square Yard

City Federation Promotes Better Speech Week Here

The City Federation of Women's Clubs, which is putting before the Atlanta public the national "Better Ameriacn Speech week," beginning today, gives the following explanathrough one of its members, Mrs. Virginia Shropshire Heath, for the campaign:

"The Literary Digest of October 20 1921, devotes page 36 to 'National American Speech week.' This Better Speech week,' as it is more commonly known, occurs this year between November 6 and 12. During this time everybody the country over is urged to mind his p's and q's, when talking, in order to guarantee better English, not for just the one week, but for the whole

"These are instances taken at random from every-day conversations of present-day college students. Does this not indicate a general need for improving spoken English in this region? Already these errors are becoming more or less ingrained through the modern methods in primary teaching, according to which children learn words not by the old-fashioned letter combination method, but through sight and sound. If sounds continue to be perverted, in time we shall develop a hopelessly peculiar brand of American quite remote from standard English which we boast having fostered through many generations in this country. The General Federation And State Support.

Mrs. Homer A. Miller, of Des Moines, reorganization chairman of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, is conducting a campaign to bring into the General Federation all clubs affiliated with their state federations. Her aim is to report a universal membership to the biennial at Chautauqua, N. Y., next summer.

The movement looks to a support-of the national body more nearly adequate to meet the demands upon it, and to finance that expansion which the plans of the organization make necessary, and the calls upon it, as the most influential organized national body of women,

It is axiomatic that any movement must move, or it is no longer a movement. It may go forward or it may go backward. It cannot stand

The General Federation of Women's Clubs has reached the point in Its honorable and active career when, unless it is given the impetus of greater financial backing, it can no longer go forward.

The state federations are doing excellent work, but with the guidance of the General Federation, and the aid of its comparative information; that is, the interchange of ideas and suggestions it affords, which is the life of any organization, and one of the two biggest reasons for organization. The other, of course, is the force that lies in concerted work, in co-operation.

The state federations could go on functioning, maybe, without the parent body. But their programs would be obliged to be circumscribed. provincial, uninspired, and lacking in the prestige of a great national influence behind it. Each of the United States of America has its own state work to do and is independent of any other state or the union of states in ability to perform some of its functions. But nobody will uestion that each state needs behind it the United States. Inversely, takes the union of the individual states to make that great world power, the United States.

Georgia has much to be proud of that the took the first steps towards universal membership of her federate. clubs in the national body, even before it was put to her General Federa on director as an urgent part of the national program. The executive be id of the Georgia Federation, passed resolutions at its September meeting to recommend to the Savannah convention the necessary change in the bylaws to bring this about. Montana is one of the most recent states which has voted to go into the General Federation with a universal member-ship. Iowa in May voted to increase the state dues to 35 cents, this to include the extra 10 cents per capita for General Federation mem-

And apropos of dues, the state dues alone in Kansas are 50 cents

One of the strongest of the recent indorsements in Georgia of the universal membership idea was that given by a joint meeting recently of the Monroe, Athens and Madison clubs at Monroe. On that occasion Mrs. Z. I. Fitzpatrick was the principal speaker in favor of the movement "It will be a great forward step," she said, 'if the Georgia Federation at Savannah votes to go into the General Federation as a unit. Unawares, perhaps, to many of the club women, it is the mother organization, which has set every pace for us, and it is our duty, aside from the many benefits coming to us, to take this most important Why not make Georgia one of the leaders? In 1859 we started with one store - today we operate 4,803 stores and still growing.

We do a business of more than $300,000,000 every year.

In the 29 States in which we operate we employ more than 20,ooo people.

Our sales of Tea in one year would float a fleet of battleships.

Our Coffee sales are more than 50,000,000 pounds each year.

Our Butter sales in one year are more than 35,000,000 pounds.

If placed in a single row, the eggs we sell each year would extend entirely around the United States.

We sell 150,000,000 pounds of Flour and 200,000,000 pounds of Sugar each year.

These are just a few records of the tremendous sales we make every year. The same proportion extends through our sales of potatoes, canned milk, soap and hundreds of other high-class groceries.

Our Entire Organization at the Furniture Exhibition Building Is Back This "Better Home" Movement

We have just completed negotiations for a new lease on our building, and while our business is comparatively young in Atlanta, we are here to stay, and we will push our "Better Atlanta Homes" campaign through the many years to come, until we have gained your confidence and until

Every Atlanta Home Has Been Reached

One of the greatest joys of life is a well furnished home—the haven of rest and quietness—which represents the expression of your personal taste.

You are the possessor of a God-given individuality, different from that of any other person living, and in the home the expression of this wonderful gift is found to be most fully pronounced.

The fact that everyone's taste demands something different calls for a variety of colors, a variety of designs, variety of finishes, and last, but not least, a variety of quality and prices.

At the Furniture Exhibition Building

You will find on display over two thousand different pieces of furniture, covering the range from a $1.00 kitchen chair to a $3,000 dining room suite, with a different design and finish for every taste, and a price to fit every purse.

Months of careful buying by our department heads has brought the greatest collection of period furniture to the Furniture Exhibition Building that was ever assembled in Atlanta or the South.

This furniture, upon close inspection, gives conclusive proof of the fact that it is furniture that will give you satisfaction throughout the years to come—a permanent invest-

Our Individual Payment Plan

It is our belief that it is just as impossible to devise a payment plan suitable to everyone as it would be to design a bedroom suite that every lady would buy; therefore, we have no specified plan by which you must pay.

No matter what your home needs, or what terms your circumstances demand, we will reel honored to have you come shopping here and let's see if we can't be of service to you.

Motor Cars and Their Part In the College Education

When the dean of Smith college, Ada Louise Comstock, addressed the Atlanta Smith College club last week, she stated that among the plans for the year just beginning, one important point to be stressed is contained in a letter sent out to the parents of all the students.

"We are asking their co-operation," she said, "in reducing the number of permissions for leaves of absence from college for week end trips and dances at men's colleges or elsewhere; and for restricting the amount of the students' spending money, and the ownership

"When the girls go to outside dances,, where they frequently stay up practically all night, naturally they are unfitted for work when they return to college. It is also difficult to be sufe of adequate

"Unlimited spending money we regard as a bad influence, both on the possessor, in the acquirement of thriftless and extravagant habits, and on the college mates who do not always realize how fortunate they are in having parents who are unwilling to encourage extravagance. "Private motor cars we look upon as a demoralizing influence, and have decided to permit them hereafter only to seniors in the spring How strange all this would have sounded ten years ago. In fact, it would have been considered an amusing exaggeration intended as a warning against encroaching evil possibilities. But school girl motors! Dances at men's colleges! Unlimited pending money! Shades of democracy and protected girlhood!

More strange is the fact that the college has had to take the first step, and to ask the parents for co-operation in the establishment of rules and provisions that will surround their girls with influences necessary for the protection of their girls' welfare, physical, mental, moral. Ten years ago the order would have been reversed. Parents would the schools, the colleges, just these protective conditions. Now the college faculties must ask the parents for aid. Comment is superfluous. There might be a whole column of editorializing, and it could carry (to those who are willing to listen) no more impressively the message of the conditions and what they mean, than recital of the conditions themselves. Smith college is no exception to the rule, as far as the girls' freedom of conduct is concerned. This article would deal only with the effort being made at Smith to meet the condition, with the welfare of the students foremost in the mind of the institution. Of the very ideal conditions now prevailing at Smith one that seems particularly interesting is the flat rates charged students for their rooms and their board. Every student is to be on the same footing as far as living is concerned. The character of their work must be

Another fine point is the arrangements by which as many girls as possible may, at least in part, earn their way through college.

This is provided for both in schotarships for exceptionally worthwhile students, and in actual paid work through which they can in part meet their expenses

"There is a splendid spirit of democracy among the girls," said Dean Comstock, "and those who are in part working their way through have a place in the student regard equal in all respects to that accorded every other student. The student body, no less than the faculty, realizes that the student who is ambitious enough to overcome obstacles in order to secure her education is the one above all others most liable to reflect credit in after life on her alma mater, as well as during her without offense to anyone In answer to those who think that executive boards have too much power, that they usurp the rights of the general body: The members of an executive board are, or should be, chosen for their ability to represent the various elements that make up the personnel of any large organization. They act for all of these, just as congress acts for us, just as our municipal ouncils act for all citizens. In large organizations, the business is sometimes of an important nature, often large sums of money are handled yearly, vital questions evelop that merit close attention. These things cannot be decided haphazard. So the best interests of an organization may be fostered if there is a standing or permanent ommittee, regular in attendance at neetings, well-posted on all affairs ertaining to the organizatio having a feeling of responsibility for the success of its work.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Experience of a Providence Woman

Providence, R. I.—''I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a female trouble and backache. It began just after my baby was born, and I did the best I could about getting r..y work done, but I had awful bearing-down pains so I could not stand on my feet. I read in the papers about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the good it was doing other women, and I have got dandy results from it and will always recommend it. You can use these facts as a testimonial if you wish."—Mrs. HERBERT L. CASSEN, 18 Meni Court, Providence, R. I.

Providence, R. I.

Ohio woman for three years could hardly keep about and do her housework she was soill. Made well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound:
Fayette, O.—"For about three years I was very nervous and had backache, sideache, dragging-down pains, could not sleep at night, and had no appetite. At times I could hardly do my housework. I got medicine from the doctor but it did not help me. I saw Lydis E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in a newspaper and took it with good results, and am now able to do my housework. I recommend your medicine to my friends and you may publish my testimonial."—Mrs. CHESTER A. BALL, R. 15, Fayette, Ohio.

An Illinois woman relates her experience:

An Illinois woman relates her experience: Bloomington. Ill.—"I was never very strong and female trouble kept me so weak I had no interest in my housework. I had such a backache I could not cook a meal or sweep a room without raging with pain. Rubbing my back with alcohol sometimes eased the pain for a few hours, but did not stop it. I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and six bottles of it have made me as strong and healthy as any weman; and I give my thanks to it for my health."—Mrs. J.A. McQuitty, 610 W. Walnut St., Bloomington, Ill.

The conditions described by Mrs. Cassen, Mrs. Ball, and Mrs. McQuitty will The conditions described by Mrs. Cassen, Mrs. Ball, and Mrs. McQuitty will appeal to many women who struggle on with their daily tasks in just such conditions—in fact, it is said that the tragedy in the lives of some women is almost beyond belief. Day in and day out they slave in their homes for their families—and beside the daily routine of housework, often make clothes for themselves and for their children, or work in their gardens, all the while suffering from those awful bearing-down pains, backache, headaches, nervousness, the blues, and troubles which sap the very foundation of life until there comes a time when nature gives out and an operation seems inevitable. If such women would only profit by the experience of these three women, and remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the natural restorative for such conditions it may save them years of suffering and unhappiness.

There is hardly a neighborhood in any town or hamlet in the United States wherein some woman does not reside who has been restored to health by this famous medicine. Therefore ask your neighbor, and you will find in a great many cases that at some time or other she, too, has been benefited by taking it, and will recommend it to you. For more than forty years this old-fashioned root and herb medicine hasbeen restoring suffering women to health and strength. Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book opon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent to you free upon request. Write to The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts. This book contains valuable information.

The best thing to use is Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beats anything else all to pieces. You can get Mulsified at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.—

Christmas Cards

The demand for Engraved Personal Christmas Greeting Cards is always so great toward the end of the season that it is impossible to give the desired service and avoid disappointment.

To eliminate this condition, as far as possible, we advise the early placing of orders for engraved Christmas Greeting Cards and we are now ready to submit samples of our new designs.

These cards represent by far the most exquisite line we have ever shown.

Early selection is advisable as quantities are limited in some of the most desirable numbers

Special Orders for Engraved Personal Greeting Cards should be placed now.

Miss Ingram Is Bride Of E. H. Sessamen

Miami, Fla., November 5 .- A beautiful event of Thursday evening, October 27, was the marriage of Miss Mary Ingram and E. H. Sessamen, of Atlanta, which was solemnized at the First Baptist church, in Miami. Rev. J. L. Whie performed the ceremony.

The church was beautifully decorated with handsome palms and potted plants, forming a background for white wicker baskets filled with bright vellow blossoms.

Banked along the choir loft were visps of Florida moss and fronds of ferns, the center being distinguished with its arch over which was draped maline of fuchia shade and tied in a large drooping bow at the top, this forming a frame for Mrs. George Molles and Robert Louis Zoll, who sang nuptial music

Atlanta to Entertain Distinguished Woman. Atlanta's distinguished guest tomorrow will be Mrs. Thomas G. Win-Center Social Interest Clubs, and member of the advisory board of the United States representation in the armament conference.

Atlanta's social interest was divided for the week-end between the Tech-Clemson game yesterday on Grant field, when beautiful weather helped to make the occasion most auspicious, and the game in Athens between the state universities of Georgia and Virginia.

A splendid crowd witnessed the Atlanta game, and a special train ook its big burden also to Athens. Among the distinguished spectators in Athens were Governor and Mrs. J. W. Davis, of Virginia, and Governor and Mrs. T. W. Hardwick, of Georgia; the president of the Georgia senate and the speaker of the house, and prominent alumni of both universities, as well as a great concourse of young people.

Many of Georgia's belles of the college set went to Athens in time for the several days' social activity preceding the football day, these events including dinner-dances by the Buccaneers and the Senate club, a play by the Thalians, and a Pan-Hellenic dance. Five of the Greek letter societies gave week-end house parties.

5,000 Pairs of Women's Finest

Silk Hosiery at $2.39

Worth $3 and $3.50 Pr.

-Wherever merchants congregate, in New York, Chicago or in San Francisco, our Silk Hosiery selling is table talk. Either Atlanta's appetite for Silk Hosiery is insatiate, or M. Rich and Bros. Co. are shrewd to the degree uncanny, is the upshot of such conversations.

-Our opinion about it, if they should ask us, and not that we pretend to know more about it than anyone else, would be that it is the happy combination of both these elements which enables us to do these big things in a big, broad way!

-Here is the trick again, turned to the nicety of biscuits done brown and piping hot.

-Two great manufacturers (you know them well) were visited. They yielded. We have, therefore, 5,000 pairs of fine and finest Silk Hosiery to sell at $2.39 a pair, worth by the best standards of value, from $3_to

ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 6, 1921.

T of the thousands of pictures submitted in The Constitution's $1,000 Amateur Snap-Shot contest the judges selected the three photographs shown above as the best.

The delightful child portrait at the right won second prize. The picture is that of Frances Louise Lyle and was taken by Mrs. C. O. Lyle, Jr., of 44 Park avenue, Atlanta.

Third prize was awarded to the magnificent picture at the bottom of the group, "A Northern Scene," taken by E. R. Donaldson, of 42 East Twelfth street, Atlanta.

She spoke as if she were voicing a truth and Corinna listened with an air of equal conviction. "If he's agreeable he'll do as well as anybody. At any rate, he'll be some one to talk to, and to make a fourth at bridge."

Under such devious auspices, then, were the two young men invited for the week-end holiday.

Things really should have gone brilliantly well. The weather was perfect and the country at its late April best. To these four young people, on arrival, never had the sky seemed so deeply blue, nor the air so thinningly soft, and surely never before had apple blossoms been so pink and so white as those blooms which glorified the Platt orchard into one great bouquet. And thus it was with this setting and these four young actors: the properties were all there, without one fault, and the players each in his heart attuned to his role. The frony of it is that the play went wrong because two of the stars deberately bungled the cues.

Thus the talk went on veering from nouse decoration and face creams and frocks to the events just done with and the events forthcoming. The latter trend naturally included the two male partici Natural talk, yet somehow delicately veiled, behind that veil of words something different but unrevealed.

So these two held as hard to the po sitions each had chosen to assume as it each were not more than half aware of the other's deception. Yet not quite aware enough to establish utter confidence. They kissed good-night at last, amiably and with but the minutest of reservations. For they were really well disposed toward each other; had not the other's tortuous method involved her own secret swain, each would have proved herself a loyal As it was, though there was some thing of the freemasonry of the sisterhood in that exchanged kiss-as if each were mutely saying: "I'm on to you, old dear, and I wish you luck"-at the same time that scarcely perceivable hint of reserve "But you'd better not go too far added:

with my property!" It was this modicum of suspicion that made Corinna, just before going off to sleep, commune with herself: "I hope she overdresses for that walk. Becky knows how to make a picture of herself for the evening, or for any outdoor affair which demands that you be merely decorative. But I would doubt whether she has a practical pair of boots and a really sensi-ble walking skirt to her name. And when Andy hikes I imagine he wants to hike!"

And it was perhaps the desire to verify these not essentially uncharitable musings that brought her, at a quarter before even next morning, to a stealthy vantage behind her window curtains and kept her there nearly half an hour. But if she anticipated the reward of seeing her friend attired in ridiculous unsuitablity, she was fated to disappointment. When Becky at last appeared she swung along sturdily in the most practical of walking outfits. But the early sun caught dazzling gleams from her uncovered head. Andy was hatless, nehow it struck Corinna as unduly intimate, this going off with bare They seemed very merry, too-Becky's voice floating back in a high vivacious prattle, and Andy punctuating it twice with a hearty, unaffected guffaw. They looked as if they were actually enjoying themselves! And Andy, though he had thought beforehand that his morning's adventura poiled before it was begun, soon found he was having a much better time than he had anticipated.

'We must rub it in at breakfast. Yes, we must do that. We'll make them sorry for their laziness," he said, looking as if he found that prospect rather enjoyable. "Corinna's an old lazy-bones, but she's a sweet thing," said Becky. "And so exquisitely lovely—don't you think so?"

, she's a beautiful girl." 'And not at all selfish and petty as ost pretty, popular girls are apt to be She's as generous and loyal as if she were plain as a poet,"

Andy was moved to answer to this that Corinna seemed not the lone generous example of her sex. Queer, he observed; he'd always heard that attractive women were catty about each other-which went to prove that such traditional concepts were true only in "funny" stories. In fact women were exceptionally 'liberal and gracious in this regard. For instance she, Becky, and Corinna were both conspicu ously attractive girls, yet they never by word or deed disparaged the other. On the contrary, they never let slip an opportunity to sing the other's praise.

Becky listening, turned her head to hide a shrewd smile. She was thinking how really pathetic men are in their trust ing simplicity. Yet they were termed the superior sex'

All in all the hike turned out more successfully than any one might have prophecied, and, as they briskly retraced their steps, Becky was pluming herself not a little. Doubtless one cause of their high spirits was that anticipated "rubbing it in" at the breakfast table-each with his special auditor paramountly in mind. And this is the reason, indutiably, that their spirits clouded over as soon as the breakfast table was reached; those auditors were not there. No traces of them save plates and cups and saucers not vet cleared away-vestiges such as make for depression even when the person who has eaten and vanished is not one you were specially keying up to see. The returned pedestrians learned that Miss Foster and Mr. Immet had appeared for breakfast about eight o'clock, and later had gone away somewhere in a car.

"Eight o'clock!" said Andy, sounding almost indignant. "Why, I thought Immet never 'really woke up' before noon!" "And Corinna wouldn't go walking because she wanted to sleep!" accused "I suppose they were just throwing us off the scene on purpose," said Andy, looking miserable. "It would seem that way. Well, let's not mourn!-I'm starved."

Despite her famished declaration she only pecked at her toast; and Andy ate his bacon and eggs as though they were savorless. They talked, but there grew an affect of effort, and lengthening silences; that earlier spontaneity was gone. To such an end comes the spuriously effervescent companionability of two when a secret stimulus, based on futurities, resolves into just empty dishes.

Out in the hall she called for Aunt Em. but couldn't evoke an answer; she'd have been all the more disgruntled had she known Aunt Em deliberately chose not to Aunt Em thought she was being kind. She had come noiselessly to the dining room door and, peeping in, had tiptoed away again so as to leave the two young things alone

"Well, said Becky, "I'm sorry, but I must ask to be excused a little while. I have to attend to some things upstairs. You'll find magazines in the library-or nice on the porch. Just make yourself at home Thanks, I'll be all right. Don't bother

"The others will surely be back any

"Very likely. I'll be all right," he said

But he wasn't all right. He picked up book or two in the library, laid them down again without noticing their titles, drifted outdoors, and wandered aimlessly through the grounds, strewing half smoked eigarettes over Mr. Platt's carefully kept sward. It was a wonderful day and ordi narily he would have exulted in its beau ing through that goldenness with another man, looking up at him from under her long lashes in the captivating way she Yes, she was probably making herself captivating for him, was probably dippy about the fellow—must be, to take the trouble to steal off alone with him like that. Immet was the kind women took to; gazed at them ardently, and made daring speeches and all that sort of thing. He himself couldn't carry off that sort of thing at all. He sighed. He didn't espe cially admire "that sort of thing" in men but, just then, he'd have turned himself into a swash-buckling buccaneer of hearts

He looked at his watch-nearly eleven Where could they be? What were they doing? What were they talking about? His imagination conjured unpleasant pic tures to roll before his mind. He return ed to the veranda, watched the drive. Why didn't they come?-they might have a de cent regard for appearances at least-thi wasn't a party of just two. And as for Becky, sequestered in he room she had temporarily given way to a mood of not caring a whit how Andy Benson occupied himself. It wasn't that she was an inconsiderate hostess or that she didn't like Andy; it was simply that events had driven her into a spiritual state where she refused to be bothered with things or people extraneous to her incli Presently, perhaps, she might put herself out again to be sweet to him, but not until something to be gained thereby should justify the exertion. And until such time she merely thrust him out of her mental picture. She didn't trouble to reflect whether there was unscrupulousness in her method but went about the business of gettia physically refreshed. A certain spiritual refreshment gradually followed. After her bath she lay down a while, but not to sleep; she was rehearsing her demeanor when the truants should return. She decided to be surpassingly amiable; after all, there was nothing to be angry about it was, of course, the machinations of Corinna, the sly minx! That last though evoked a shrewd but tolerably indulgent smile as she rose, finally, to sit in con-clave with the contents of her week-end trunk. She tried on a jade-green sweat as opposed to a turquoise-blue, a half dozen times; she inclined toward the blue, but a sport hat with a jade facing was triumphantly becoming.

She didn't make that careful toilette with any thought of Andy Benson, yet it developed that he was to be its chie spectator-and an unappreciative one out of all proportion to its merits, it must be admitted. For, about 1 o'clock, Nick telephoned, from twenty miles or so away, that he'd had trouble with his engine and that it would be an hour or so longer before the local garage people could get it repaired; he and Corinna would find something to eat-the others were not to

So luncheon wasn't waited. Poor Aunt Em, striving to keep the conversation briskly cheerful, wondered what had gone amiss with young love's haleyon. When Becky proposed, since there was no telling when the others would return, that the three of them should go and hear a neighbor's new pipe organ, Aunt Em, con scientious to the end, pleaded a head-

Andy loathed the idea of leaving that veranda whence he could keep an eye on the drive, but could think up no plausible excuse for staying. Becky loathed the idea no less, but her mood had rolled round to the secretly resentful, spiritdangerous stage again. They shouldn't find her sitting there with folded hands.

just waiting for them! The neighbor's pipe organ was truly marvelous. An electric device had been installed which carried the music out to the garden and set it free there, to swell into inexpressible beauty as the solemn harmonies floated above the tree tops and soared away to high heaven. There was something vaguely sorrowful about it all, but rapturous. It would have been pure ecstasy had not some poignant quality in that flood of sweet sound pouring out in that green garden spot, awakened an aching desire to share one's vibrant response with one another. Provided just the right ombination of auditors, heaven it could have given no keener bliss. As it was, Becky fidgeted and Andy looked covertly at his watch.

Nevertheless, when they returned nome and saw the delayed moto ists playing 'cut throat' auction on the veranda with Aunt Em, you'd never have surmised from Becky's tone and manner that her afternoon had known any lack. She gave a rhapsodic description. "Wasn't it glorious, Andy?" "Andy nodded affirmati

"But it's a shame you poor things bave had such a miserable day," she added comniseratingly.

Now Corinna didn't relish being called "poor thing" at this juncture, and she didn't relish the new intimacy connoted by Beckys use of Andy's Christian name so, though her memory of that day would ever be a sort of pudding composed of dust, heat, greasy food, and boredom in-describable, she smiled a sweet denial and said warmly: "O, we didn't have a bad time at all! really was fun, wasn't it, Nick?" Nick corroborated her, as a gentleman "And I learned to drive-Nick's the most wonderful teacher!" Now it was not rn to rhansodize-on Nick's amazing knowledge, his technical skill, his infinite patience. When she stopped for breath, Becky started in again, this time on the morning's walk. Neither duellist was to be outdone. They kept it up, while nen looked rather dazed, until the party oke up to dress for dinner.

When Corinna reappeared downstairs, dressed in something as soft and fragile was waiting to intercept her.

"It seems I'm fated to see nothing at ell of you on this trip," he complained.

She shrugged delicately. "Is it your experience that one always gets 'fed up' with a person just because one has spent hours in that person's society?"

She rose, then, and walked slowly over to the window, pushed aside the swaying certains and stood gazing out toward the sound, presumably visionizing its coming glory. It was, indeed, as Cortuna and promissied a clorious night: the air sweet with the evasive scents of spring; the rising moon, nearly at the full: the shimmering carpet it stretched across the sound; the silver flood it poured down on the lawn: the shadows it pushed back into soft carbon vagueness-everything beauty and magic and mystery.

"Room here for two." she invited. Andy seated himself beside her.
"What a worder of a night!" she observed; not a strikingly original remark -probably a thousand other girls on the continent were voicing approximately the

The circumstances, here, were eviden ly not right, for Andy shifted uneasily and frowned a little. Not that anything was h her observation per was only too correct. "O, Corinna won't know whether it's cold or not!' And she gave that hateful little laugh again. This time he couldn't make himself ignore it.

"What do you mean?" he asked. "Haven't you eyes of your own to see with?" she demanded back.

"What have they failed to see?" inviting, while dreaming, her confirmation which he didn't need.

"Why, that Nick's crazy about her." "I can understand that. But that does n't imply the-regard is mutual, does it? But to Andy these were not favorable His jealousy told him that this aloofness was discreetly premediated, that this silence meant that they had said all the important things already.

Becky may or may not have read the same interpretation; but she presented a remarkable blithe front.

Andy was left limp on the bench, Dazedly he looked around him, turned, and then saw that lighted window. Revelation burst upon him. She had seen them! The only girl in the world he wanted to kiss had caught him kissing another and thought he wanted to! How could he ever explain? Then he gave a sardonic laugh as it came to him that it couldn't possibly make any difference to her, since she cared for another man, how many girls he kissed or how many times.

It surged in so hard that it was on his lips behe had time to remember tact.

"Then you know that kiss didn't mean anything!" he blurted out. "Kiss-what kiss?" asked Corinua, registering bewilderment.

"Did you see them, too?" she asked interestedly. "I stumbled upon them, but I didn't know' you'd been round on that side of the house."

Then, before he could take any advantage of this evident false inference, just as he was congratulating himself that she surely hadn't seen the incriminating caress after all, she went on in a casual

"Or pernaps you mean when you kissed her, a while ago."

Andy grouned inside, but her voice continued, light and amiable. "O. no. I didn't suppose that meant anything. I knew they were simply dippy about each other-Nick's talked nothing but Becky all day. It was a queer thing for Becky to do, though-even just in fun. I was surprised that she let you kiss her.'

There was the slightest hint of cen-sure in her tone. Andy, an honest and perturbed but chivalrous soul, was trying to think what to say-what was the thing to say or whether it was better to keep entirely still-when she spoke again. She had the impersonal, ruminative manner of one discussing an abstract theme.

And it is probable that those who were so quick to make false accusation against Paul were actuated by reasons entirely different from those which they proclaimed.

Even a little experience in life is sufficient to convince any one that the indictments made by clamorous tongues do not always state the real cause of offense. As Demetrius, the silversmith of Ephesus when he feared Paul's success in preaching the Gospel to the Esphesians would rob him of his business of making shrines for the city's goddess, concealed a selfish rosson in his praise of Diana, so today we find mercenary motives clocked in

Why Paul Knew Not Fear.

BUT to come to the paramount thought of today's talk, so beautifully set forth in the words of the Psalmist.

"God is our refuge and strength, A very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear."

It is an excellent text with which to begin this series of articles, and Paul furnishes us with as good an illustration as history presents. God was his refuge and his strength; God was his present help in every time of trouble, and, because of his trust in God, Paul knew not fear. He says of himself (II Cor. 11:23-

We are constantly confronted by our limitations. Our hands can lift but a few pounds, while the hands of the Almighty piled mountain upon mountain. A Priceless Privilege.

THIS is so large a theme that it is hard to compress within the limits of this weekly Talk all that one might say on the priceless privilege that God's creatures have in finding in Him a refuge in every time of trouble. William Cullen Present has nead this trouble. Bryant has made this thought the climax of one of his greatest poems, "The Odo to the Water Fowl." After describing the flight of the bird between its northern and its summer homes, he puts into exquisito language the lesson of our Golden Text: "He, who, from zone to zone,

Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,

In the long way that I must tread alone, Will lead my steps aright." (Copyright, 1921, for The Constitution.)

Place of Japan In Pacific

APAN, which from a position of isola-J ArAN, which from the penalty of the tipe in the Asian seas, has emerged to become one of the dominant factors in the Pacific, might be termed the narrower and less compact Britain of the Far East.

Like the British Isles, the Japanese Islands form the fringe of a great con-tinent; both were in the hands of petty kings and grew into a centralized nation; both looked abroad for expansion; and both have conceived of their safety and future prosperity as dependent targely on sea power, according to the National Geo-graphic society.

But there are differences as well as likenesses between these two island pations. Since she began to grow into an empire Great Britain has resolutely turned her back on Europe in so far as ter nuisitions are concerned, and her colonists into the remote parts of the world. Japan, on the other hand, has accontinent, but has expanded somewhat in other directions also. Great Britain has become the headquarters of a scattered, distant empire. Japan has remained so far the center of her empire with her pos-sessions drawn relatively elosely about

The magnitude of Japan's fresent interests in the Pacific can better be understood, perhaps, by imagining her island territories transferred to the more famihar Atlantic and the directions reversed. The various groups of Japanese Islands then extend from the Shetland islands southward along the coasts of Europe and Africa for 2,700 miles. Formosa would be situated just north of the Cape Verde islands. The Marianne or Ladrone islands of the mandate would occupy a position near the Azores; and the hundreds of islands of the Caroline and Marshall groups (the remaining - mandate lantic from near the Cape Verdes almost to Cuba. Honolulu, under this transposed geography, would occury about the position of Sante Fe. New Mexico.

Problems of Pacific Simple.

FIRST, and an important one, is that the difficulties to be adjusted as at present defined, confined to one side only of the earth's surface which, if huge, is nevertheless fairly simple, being mostly water. It is the problems of the Pacific ocean that we have to handle. These problems are comparatively definite-the kind of thing that you can get down on paper with something like precision. They have one great advantage, and that is that in the main they do not involve a past running into the dim distance. England has held Hong Kong, a conquest of the opium war, for only about eighty years. We, the United States, have had port privileges in China only since 1844. France first got a stronghold in Cochin China in 1862, and her protectorate over Annam is less than forty years old. It was only twenty-five years ago that the war be-tween Japan and China over Korea began; the complications in eastern Russia are still younger. So are those in Shan tung, Yap, the Philippine Islands. That is, the chief bones of contention in the coming conference are freshly picked. Conference Leaders Are Tried Men.

THESE nations have all committed I themselves solemaly to certain definite pacific ideals, laid down by the United States of America. True, their ideals are pretty badly battered, and we as a govnment are in the anomalous position of temporarily abandoning them after having committed our friends to them. However, they still stand on their feet these ideals, and they are gaining fresh vigor and confidence every day in this particular nation.

It should be counted as a decided advantage that the associations of the years of the war have made the men who will represent the different nations at the conference fairly well acquainted with one another. Whatever disappoint ments there may be in the delegations we can depend upon it that the men chosen will be tried men. They are pretty sure to be men of trustworthy character, with records of respe chievement, men like Root and Hughes and Underwood in our own de'egation. They will not come unknown to each other or unknown to the nations involved It will be a simple matter for us, the public, to become acquainted with their records. If, by any unhappy chance, there should be among them a political intriguer that, too, will be known-fore-

These are all good reasons for expecting that we shall get something of what we start out for. How much of it we will get and how permanent that which we get will be will depend in no small degree upon the attitude of mind of this country, whether the backing that we give the conference is to be one of emotionalism or intelligence. We are starting out with a will to succeed; we are going to spend our first day praying for success. It will be well if we inject into those prayers a supplication for self-control, clearness of judgment, and willingness to use our minds as well as our hearts in the straggles that are sure to

Obstacles That May Arise.

CERTAIN very definite things may get in the way of the success of the conference - things that often frustrate the best intentions of men, and they are matters over which the public and the press have at least a certain control, things which they can certainly make infinitely worse unless they take a high and intelligent view of their own respon-

First, let us set our face against scapegoats. One of the serious temptations, both of conferees and of public in a great conference such as we are just enare bound to be periods in all human undertakings when the way is obscure, when failure threatens, when it is obvious that certain things on which we have set our hearts are unobtainable. Irritation and discouragement always characterize these eriods. It is then that men take refuge in heaping all the blame for the difficulties in which they find themselves on particular individual or group-in this case a nation-a nation which

of this great undertaking.

everybody comstinate, unreason able, greedy, a wheel. We have seen this thing happen in every great peace conference of the world. Then comes a hue and cry, a union of persuade but to overwhelm the recalcitrant nation, to disgrace court. The spirit of adjustment and accommedation which is the very essence of success in such an undertaking as the nations now have on hand is always imperiled and frequently ruined by fixing

It is obvious even at this point that this is one of the very real dangers of the coming conference, Employ Meanness for Public Good.

T HIS is not to say that the nation on which irritation and suspicion are concentrated may not be in the wrongit may be. It may be deep in evil intrigue. It may be shockingly greedy. But it is well to remember that it is part of the conference and the problem has got to be worked out with it, and that you work nothing out with scapegoats. Abraham Lincoln once laid down a principle of statesmanship which admirably applies to such a situation. "Honest statesmanship," he said, "is the employment of Individual meanness for the public good." In the coming conference honest negotiations will be the employment of national meanness-in case such develops-for the good of the world. takes brains, humor, self-control to put any such rule as this in force; but if, unhappily, the conference itself does not furnish a sufficient amount of these in-gredients it is for press and public to make good the deficit. They are in a strategic position where they can insist that everybody must be considered innocent until he is proved guilty, that nothing be built on suspicion but everything And something that is very important to remember is that these facts must be taken with the proper historical perspective. Certain things are obvious in the Pacific relations today that we don't like. There is a pretty general consensus of opinion that Japan has played altogether too high a hand with China. Admit it, but do not forget that it is only about sixty years ago that the very nations with whom Japan is now meeting in council, met with their fleets in one of her ports beauties of Christian civilization. She decided to learn their lessons. She has wonderful imitative powers. She followed them into China and if she has played a higher hand there than any one of them—and there may be a question as to that—it should be remembered she has had only sixty years in which to learn the degree of greed that can safely be practiced in our modern civilization. That is, that possibly she has not had sufficient time to learn to temper exploitation with civilized discretion Press and Public Can Down Partisanship.

N O scapegoats. No hues and cris. And certainly no partisanship. It is within the power of the allied forces of this country that are setting themselves to making this conference a success, to make it truly national, to see that party ambitions and antirathies have nothing to do either way with negothations. We have had within the last three years a tarrible lesson on the lengths to which men's partisanship will go if unchecked, in wrecking even the peace of the world. Let us have no repetition of that crime. It is the busine's of the press and the public to stamp down any partisan leanings that show their ugly heads in the conference.

And let us remember, too, the danger there is in matters of this kind from crudeness of opinion—snap judgments. We love to be thought wice. There are thousands of us who at this moment are getting out our maps to find where Yap lies or the points between which the eastern Chinese railroad runs-who will be tempted sooner or later to become vio-lent partisans of, we wi'l say "YAP FOR AMERICA?"

T HERE is a tale told of a frivolous young woman who had had it impressed on her that she should learn to converse seriously. She read her first historical book, a life of Mary, Queen of Scots. And when a young man called in the evening ran to meet him with excited eye, exclaiming: . "Isn't it terrible about that poor Mary, Queen of Scots!" The execution was news to her. A lot of us are going to come to this conference in that state of mind. Snap judgments—au easy but obstinate acceptance of this or that view of what ought to be done will not contribute to the solution of problems. What ought to be done in regard to Yap and the eastern Chinese railroad and Shantung and all the rest will be what the representatives of all the nasolution find that they all can consent to.

Everybody Must Make Sacrifices.

Now, this will probably mean sacrifices on everybody's part. Let us get it clearly in our minds that before we get through this thing, if we are ever going to have the limitation of armament which we desire, we, the United States, may have to sacrifice some definite thing -a piece of soil, a concession, a naval base in the Pacific-and that nothing more fatal to the success of the conference can happen than for us to set our teeth and say: -WE MUST HAVE THIS -quite as fatal as setting our teeth and saying: THIS OR THAT NATION MUST

Our contribution, the contribution of the press and public, to the success of this great undertaking, must be something vastly more important than espousing this or that settlement. It must be backing the spirit of adjustment, of concession, of fairness, of sacrifice if necessary, a resolute determination to have nothing to do with scapegoats, with hues and cries-nothing to do with suspicions, everything with facts; and if meanness develops, to follow Lincoln and handle that meanness with such brains, humor and patience that it will help rather than defeat the ends of peace.

ered on the outskirts at a respectful distance. All of them were chewing betel-nut-From the house, I watched the council assemble, but I did not go out until Omar came for me. Then, with Omar and Mun-shee walking beside me, I left the house, dressed in native costume - Chinese trousers, sarong and jacket. The chattering ceased as I approached, and all eyes were centered on me. Every one was visibly impressed by the fact that I was wearing the clothes of a native, and that they were of the finest quality, and entitled me to much consideration. The importance of staging such an expedition—all the "magic," the talk, the council and the costume—was not to be underrated. As I have explained before, the natives are extremely impressionable; if they like a man and believe in him, they will do anything he asks, and if they do not believe in him, they will run wild at the moment when he needs them most. The orang-outang hunt was the most important and difficult thing of its kind I had ever attempted; it required the greatest technical proficiency, because there were numerous chances of failure through little miscalculations. Elephant driving is, after all, largely a matter of simple strategy combined with endurance; and capturing leopards is about on a par with setting mouse traps when compared with getting full-grown orang-outangs into cages I squatted before the council and talked long and earnestly about the work lay before us. I told the vil'agers that I had left important business in Singapore at the request of their headmen, to come and help them; that I had hesitated about making the trip and had been persuaded only by the promises of Omar and Ma-hommed Munshee that every assistance would be given me. I explained that I had the permission of the resident-general and that he had offered me men, but that I had refused, because I knew I could depend on

Man Eaters of the Jungles

Noted Wild Animal Lecturer Declares Elephant Hunting and the Capture of Leopards Is About On Par With Setting Mouse Traps When Compared With Getting Orang-Outangs Into Cages—Tells of Difficulty of Overcoming Desire of Natives to Kill the Animals.

Then I called upon the men who had een sent out to locate the orang-outangs. They had found them about two hours' distance from the village; they described location and told how it could be reached. A general discussion followed. I gave each man a chance to express his They all wanted to talk-preferably all at the same time-and the council dragged on for hours. With the assistance of Omar, I kept the debate orderly, and we listened to all sorts of opinions.

For the most part, they felt that it would be necessary to kill the animals. That, of course, was the last thing in the world that I wanted. It would mean that the expedition was wast-ed effort; there are few live orangoutangs in zoological gardens; but many stuffed ones in museums. I did not agree with the idea that we ould have to kill the animals, but I did not entirely disagree. We compromised by reaching the decision that, if they must be killed, I should the work and no man should try to kill them without my consent natives had seen what one bulfrom my rifle would do to a c, and they were convinced that an orang-outang would stand a poor

THE council broke up and work began. I had Omar set some of his men to making strong nets of twisted rattan. He drew plans for the two cages and had other men gather the limbs of trees for them. The cages were just large enough to hold the animals and small enough to keep them from getting any leverage on the bars. After skel tons of the cages were built, they were bound tightly with ratton ropes so that, even if the bars were broken, the orang-outags would be in a network.

The strength of a full grown orang-outang is enormous. I have seen one bend a one-inch steet bar as though it were made of rubber. with plenty of room to exert his entire strength, he can bend almost anything; but between bending a r and broking a rope by pulling. there is a great deal of difference. A rattan rope will hold him, though a simple menagerie cage may not give him any more trouble than a

In orang-outang never travels on ground when he can swing from very few open spaces in the jungle, he se'dom reaches the ground except when he goes down to get something. He can swing incredible distances, hurtling through the air and catching branches with per-feet accuracy.

Orang-outangs usually live in colnumbering from forty to six-, and the largest and most powerful is chief. They make their home on platforms in the branches o and they build the platforms by breaking off limbs and putting them crisscross. In mating season the male and female live together but the couples separate after the young are born. The mother takes care of them and the father goes off about

S they do in the case of most danger-A strey do in the case orang-outangs by killing the mother and taking the young. The weapon they most is the blow-pipe, which, in the hands of an expert, is not to be despised. It is a long, slender tube, measuring from six to eight feet, made from a single joint of a rare bamboo. The tube is allowed to dry and harden and is wrapped tightly with size of a steel knitting needle, are made one end there is a small conical butt, which fits tightly into the bore of the pipe. A small nick is made in the shaft of the dart just below the point, and the end is coated with a deadly polson made from the sap of the upas-tree and another species of the genus Ipo. When the dart strikes, the end breaks off and remains in the wound; the poison acts rapidly, first paralyzing, then killing the victim. In warfare, also, the natives poison kris and spear, and the wound is invariably fatal. Fighting a full-grown orang-outang with weapons so primitive is extremely hazardous work, and the natives avoid it except when a beast becomes a menace to the village. An orang-outang in battle is ferocious. If it is treed and afraid to come down, it goes into a paroxysm of fury. It will bite its arms, tearing the flesh away and inflicting frightful wounds. twenty-five to accompany me while I went the men against doing anything that might frighten the animals unnecessarily and explained that we should do no hunting smaller game until we had attended to the two big orang-outangs. With the guides leading, we started into the dense ngle, and, after several hours of slow, tertuous traveling, we came to the tree where the animals lived. I could see, far up, the platform they had built."

Fortunately the orang-outangs were not there, and we were able to inspect the

to fell the trees without first cutting the network woven between them; for it would have held the trees upright even though they were cut at the base. Without tearing the creepers to the ground, we cut back as far as sixty feet on all sides. I estimated that the trees beyond would be well out of swinging distance for the orangs. At the point where I planned to have the big tree drop, I had an additional thirty feet cut. Then, when the creepers were all simply hanging, we began work First-rate native jung'e men use their parangs with astounding rapidity and accuracy. I doubt if there are any finer woodsmen in the world. Their greatest fault is that they like to stop working in order to talk. Omar, Munshee and I, knowing this weakness for conversation, circled through the jungle constantly, urging our men on. Partly as a result of this watchfulness, perhaps, I have never seen natives do a piece of work more neatly and rapidly. It was vitally important, of course, that we finish before the big fellows came swinging back

The trees were cut so that they remained standing. We were trying to achieve something like a flimsy structure built of cards or dominoes, which one push will send toppling. At a signal, every tree in the circle I had mapped out was to fall, those at the center, first, and the others in order, until the one in which the orang-outangs had their platform was isolated. It was a nice problem in jungle-craft to cut the trees so that they would bear the weight of animals swinging in the branches, and vet be so weak that they would all fall-and in the proper directions-when we started them by pulling on the ropes. I allowed myself to be guided entirely by the judgment of the natives; they appreciated my confidence and took care to see that the work was done accurately.

The hacking with the parangs and the conversation attracted hundreds of jungle animals, including many of the smaller orang-outangs. We did not molest them, and they grew bolder, until we had a large, chattering, screaming audience watching us work.

Long before the two big brutes came back to their home, we were on our way to Omar's kampong, with the first stage of the work completed. The jungle as we left it did not appear greatly different from the way it looked when we arrived. I knew that the orangoutangs would realize that some one had been there, and yet I was fairly certain that the absence of human beings would reassure them. And, too, they would have several days to accustom themselves to whatever changes they noticed.

At the kampong, I called the men together again, this time for an informal council. I told them that had considered carefully everything they had said the day before, and that, after inspecting the location, I had come to the conclusion that we could easily capture the animals. It would be simply a mat-ter of rapid work and of each man's horoughly understanding his job. Drawing a circle on the ground and planting a stick in the middle, I explained what we were to do and how we were to do it. I told them how we had cut the creepers and prepared the trees.

During the next four days we avoided the location as much as possible. Crews of men, bearing bundles of dry grass and bushes.

feet, dropped their bundles and returned to the village. The grass and bushes were to be used for the fire I planned to build at the base of the tree, once the orangoutaings were isolated there. We took care never to go near when the big fellows were at home, and the other jungle creatures grew less and less perturbed each

I remained at the kampong, supervising the making of the nets and cages. The entire population helped us, and I put some of the people to work at making smaller cages and rigging snares for other animals. Finally, when the nets and cages were ready and the material for the fire gathered and in place, I began drilling the men in their parts. Thirty men were detailed to the work of pulling down the trees in the circle; ten men to clearing the space where the big tree was to fall; and ten men to handling each side of the big net. It was upon the last named crew that the

The natives danced and yelled. Through the clouds of smoke, I could see their black bodies flashing, arms waving, and lips, stained crimson with betel-hut, wide open and hug each other. An orang-outang that has been struck by an arrow can follow the natives in the trees or on the ground while the poison is taking effect. The only refuge from the frenzied creature is the smoke of a fire, and, when it is sufficiently enraged, even that will not stop The best chance lies in keeping it harried that it does not know whom to attack; once it decides on a particular native, the native is as good as dead. When the poison begins to work, after an animal has been wounded, the natives end the fight with knives. The possibility of an orang-outang attack is a danger that all the men must be prepared to face, and the duty of engaging in an orang-outang hunt is no less important than that of making war. It was but normal, therefore, that, as soon as I had convinced the villagers of my trust-worthiness, I should have their hearty support.

After putting the men to work on the nets and cages, I selected a crew of

If there are two of the animals, they bite location at our leisure. I stationed the men at one side, telling them to wait for us, and then Omar and Munshee and I circled the tree. The surrounding jungle was as thick as any I have ever seen; the trees were so close that their branches mingled and they were woven together with creepers, vines and rattan. It was not possible to go forward a step without cutting the way. The tree in which the orang-outangs lived was the largest in Nearly an hour passed be fore I decided upon the course we would pursue. Squatting with Omar and Munshee, I explained how we would cut away the trees, so as to leave in isolation the one in which the animals had their platform; then, how we would cut that tree and tumble them into the net.

W E went back to the place where the men were waiting, and I put them to work at cutting the mass of creepers that bound the trees together. The jungle was so dense that it would have been impossible

There, from the top of the tallest structure in the world we looked down at the panorama of sparkling lights and the white-lighted st ects that spread out in every direction like the spokes of a giganin all its brilliance. ights of the gay, old city. You cannot really know your London or New York unless you know its hotel life, and this is ten times as true of Paris. In no city of the world do the hotels have the individuality of the brilliant hostelries that clurter around the Champs Elysces. It is true that they are organized from top to bottom with the one ambition, so dear to the heart of the Parisian purveyor of comfort — to fleece their guests. But the fleecing process is carried on so deftly, so artistically, and so that a sense of outrage rises in the breast of the good American citizen who has fallen into the grasp of those genial high-

THE SUNDAY CONSTITUTION MAGAZINE

"Will These Men Fight?" Asked the General—"Give Us a Chance at the Front and We'll Show You," They Said, And Their Records, Like Those of Other Units of the Great A. E. F., Gave Conclusive Answer.

BY PAUL WARWICK

OHN JOSEPH PERSHING, late of Chaumont, now of Washington, general, patriot, idol of young America—and old, for that matter - is usually represented as of rather taciturn demeanor, since that is the customary idea of martial heroes. But General Pershing has been known to converse with people, to answer questions and to ask

This story intends to deal with how one company of American soldiers answered a question asked them by Pershing. It is the same question he asked scores of other companies, either directly or indirectly, and the records show that the reply of this company was not only the reply of the division, but of the entire

The reply, too, has an added interest for us in that it was made by an organiza-tion which got its training at Camp Gordon, right on Atlanta's petticoat ruffles, we might say. The company was "G" of the 326th regiment, Eighty-second division, and the person who received the question for the outfit was Captain Lamar Jeffers, now representing the fourth dis-trict of Alabama in the house of representatives at Washington. This is how the question was asked, and then we can tell

W HEN the Eighty-second landed overseas in 1918, Company "G" was stationed at Pende, a small French hamiet near St. Valery-sur-Somme, just to the rear of a hot sector then held by the British. General Pershing passed that way, and with the usual completeness of activity, made a hurried inspection that company. He inquired after the discipline. Captain Jeffers replied proudly that not one court-martial had been listed brought out the idea of docility, and the general asked the captain:

"But will these men fight?"

"We are anxious to have the chance of answering that question at the front, sir.' replied the commander of Company "G."

The chance came, and the satisfaction General Pershing received at the answer can be gleaned from culling the lines of the letter from him, reproduced on this page. But more about that is good, and it is best to hear it in the way it was told to General Pershing by Captain Jeffers himself, every word of his communication to the general of the armies fairly exuding pride in his charges.

The question which the general had asked the captain and the reply which the captain made to the general were over-heard by members of the company, and enthusiasm for the fight was multiplied every time the conversation was repeated and it was repeated with the rapidity that such things can attain only in combat companies bound for action—when talk flew thickest of all, not excepting even the days when overseas soldiers were wondering when they would sail for home.

It might also be well to remark that Captain Jeffers was awarded the distinguished service cross for his valiant action—and that he insists on giving all the credit to the men he led on defensive sectors, at St. Mihiel and in the damning

"Just before we entered the lines. this captain to General Pershing. I held a conference with the men one afternoon (we were at that time at Gon drevil'e, near Toul), and suggested to them that I thought it would be a good idea to adopt a slogan for the company. I left it to them to decide. Many slogans were suggested but the one that received the greatest number of votes and was finally adopted as the motto for 'G' com pany was: "G' will fight till hell freezes." I always had an idea that in adopting that motto they were for themselves answering the question that they knew you had asked concerning them that day at BUT that is not the real answer this company gave to Pershing. Like hundreds of other companies which fought, bled and sometimes died on those fields, they answered it in a finer, better way, with blurbs, but with blood; not with boasts, but with bravery. Continues then the captain's proud tale of his men's achievements:

"During our service in the trenches, in the so-called quiet sectors, the company made a name for itself for endurance and for ability to take that rugged service in spirit and handle it splendidly with a great deal of credit to themselves. One time, when we were in the trenches near Flirey (Toul sector) this company had just been relieved from several days in the front trenches, and had dropped back into the secondary line of trenches where the men could relax and be a pit more confortable, when circumstances made it

"At that particular time, I was in command of the battalion and issued the order to have the men come straight back into the trenches. It was raining and awfully ome marching in the red mud. I realized how tired they were, of course, but it couldn't be helped. Four sergeants from the company came up first, to familiarize themselves with the exact ground to be taken over by their respective platoons. As they arrived at my battalion P. C., there to wait for a guide, I saw them throw themselves on the ground outside knew that they had only that morning left the front position, so I walked out and just by way of saying something to them (they were my own sergeants, you understand) said, 'What are you fellows doing back up here so soon? I thought you just left here this morning.

"And one of them said, 'Hell, captain, necessary to have them go straight back into the front line position on the night immediately following the night on which they had been relieved.

"The work of those men on that occasion reflected credit enough on me as their commanding officer so that I was recommended for and later received the D. S. C. I feel and so stated when I was presented with the D. S. I felt that instead of the one D. S. C. being given to me that if possible it should have been made into 250, one for each man in the company. For they answered your question. Don't you think 80?"

So there you are, and General Pershing did think so—just as he thinks about the other companies, the other regiments, the other outfits who went to that swirling hell on the western front and did what they had been sent there to do. They fought, and in fighting answered not only the question of John Joseph Pershing, general and patriot, but answered the question of the American nation that sent them, a question which later became pure-

GENERAL OF THE ARMIES WASHINGTON

July 22, 1921.

Captain Lamar Jeffers, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My dear Captain Jeffers:

I have read your letter with a feeling of additional pride in the unparalleled achievements of America's young manhood abroad. What could be more inspiring or exemplary of our youth than the account you relate of the conduct of Company G, 326th Infantry, and of the individual bravery and self-sacrifice of its men. Assuredly my question was answered and that to the fullest extent. I was confident at the time, and I am happy to say that. this confidence was retained all throughout the war, that I could depend on the members of the A.E.F. almost to the last man to do everything that they were called upon to do. This. confidence was fully justified by the performances and accomplishments of such organizations as yours and the intrepid men who composed it.

Thank you very much for your interesting letter, and please accept my personal commendation not only for yourself but also for those brave men whom it was your privilege to

we're front line devils, didn't you know

'That was the old 'G' company spirit sticking out. I was never so proud. They were the best in the world to me. That boy was answering your question then.

GLINALLY, in the Meuse-Argonne offensive, we had our supreme test. On the morning of October 11, 1918, we were before St. Juvin in an effort to take that town when the company showed up wenderfully. The machine guntire on that company that morning was intense, and we lost a good many men, killed and still greater number wounded. But even under that direct and withering machine gunfire the boys of that company functioned almost perfectly. "We had four officers when we crossed the Aire river that morning at daybreak and within an hour all four were casualties, two fine lieutenants having been killed and the other lieutenant and myself having been very seriously wounded. As the leaders were knocked out, the company, under the direction of the sergeants, still continued to do its best. Those grand boys, on that never-to-be-forgotten unruffled demeanor was an inspiration to me and also of course to his platoon. His D. S. C. citation is as follows:

"'RICHARD, WALTER A., first lieutenant, 326th infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near St. Juvin, France, October 11, 1918. Leading his platoon in attack. Lieutenant Richards was subjected to fierce and devastating fire of enemy artillery and machine guns. Although he himself was wounded and 90 per cent of his platoon made casualties, he continued to press forward until he was felled by machine gunfire after reaching the foremost position of the entire action.'

"I saw tiny Charles Hellman, first-class private, small of stature, but with the heart of a lion, crawl painfully along until he was mortally wounded, and then he paid the supreme price with a smile upon his lips and a word of cheer to his beloved buddies whom he was leaving behind. His D. S. C. citation is as follows:

success of the attack rested, for any mistake or delay in manipulating the net would mean that the animals would es-cape—even probably with disastrons results. Omar and Munshee helped me select the men from the number of those who had previously demonstrated their courage and resourcefulness in the face of danger. I had a long pole put up near the village, and we rehearsed the capture innumerable times; the pole would fall, and the men would cast the net and se-cure it over the bunch of grass tied to the top to represent the orang-outangs. When they had played the part so many times that there seemed to be no chance of a blunder, we had a full rehearsal. As the pole fell, this time, the other men closed in, beating with the clubs, pounding tom-toms and yelling. I wanted them to make just as much noise as possible when the orangs came down; for noise paralyzes animals with fright and makes them easier to handle.

On the eighth night at Omar's village, I called all the men togetaer and announced that we would start next morning before daybreak.

By the time it was light, each man was at his post, waiting for me to fire my pistol as a signal. We could see the two orang-outangs sleeping on their platform.

The men who were to give the trees

the final cut and send them toppling over stole forward silently. Ali was beside me, carrying my rifle; Omar and Munshee were stationed near, one at each side. I waited, scarcely daring to breathe, for them to signal that their men were ready. Omar moved first; then Munshee. I gave a quick glance around and fired my pistol. Instantly the tumult started; the men yelled and beat upon tom-toms and trees. The orang-outangs leaped up bewildered and scrambled about their platform. Through the noise I could hear the men at work with their parangs; then came the crashing of trees. The jungle seemed to fold up, and the big tree stood alone. The orangs screamed and hugged each other. Men rushed forward with the bundles of dry grass and started the fire; others came with wet leaves to make a smudge. One of the orangs started, as if to come down, and I reached for my rifle: when the smoke struck him, he back to the platform, screaming and tearing the tree. Then, as the smoke became more dense, the two animals climbed higher and sat on the topmost limb, arms nd legs wrapped around each other, completely terrified.

The natives danced and velled. Through the clouds of smoke that drifted over us, could see their black bodies flashing, arms waving, and lips, stained crimson with betel-nut, wide open. The din was terrific. For several minutes I just stood there, unable to move. (Copyright, 1921.)

Inside, Peter Ruff, a little breathless, was leaning forward, tying his white cravat with the aid of the little polished mirror the middle of the dark green cushions. At his right hand was Lady Mary, watching his proceedings with an air of agonized impatience.

"Lot me tell you-" she begged. "Kindly wait till I have tied this and put my stads in," Peter Ruff interrupted. "it is impossible for me to arrive at a ball in this condition, and I cannot give whole attention to more than one thing at a time.'

"We shall be there in five minutes!" she exclaimed. "What is the good, unless you understand, of your coming at all?"

Peter Ruff surveyed his tie critically. Fortunately, it pleased him. He began to press the stude into their places with firm fingers. Around them surged the traffic in front, the gleaming arc of light; around Hyde Park Corner. They brougham swaved dangerously as they cut in on the wrong side of an island lamppost. A policeman shouted after them, an eld up his hand—the driver of the brougham took no notice.

"I am ready," Peter Ruff said, quietly. "My younger brother-Maurice," she began, breathlessly-"you-ve never met him, I know, but you've heard me speak He is private secretary to Sir James Wentley-

"He finished it in his own rooms at half-past seven." Lady Mary answered. "He discovered its loss at eleven o'clock—directly he had arrived at the ball." "Why dian't he come to me himself? Peter Ruff asked. "I like to have these particulars at first hand." He is in attendance upon Sir James at the ball," Lady Mary answered. "There is trouble in the east, as you know, and Sir James is expecting dispatches tonight. Maurice is not allowed to leave.

"Has he told Sir James yet?" "He had not when I left," Lady Mary answered. "If he is forced to do so, it will be ruin! Mr. Ruff, you must help us. Maurice is such a dear, but a mistake like this, at the very beginning of his career, would be fatal. Here we are. That is my brother waiting just inside the hall."

YOUNG man came up to them in the otherwise perfectly self-possessed. From the shine of his glossy black hair to the tips of his patent boots he was, in appearance, everything that a young Engshauan of birth and athletic tastes could hope to be. Peter Ruff liked the look of He waited for no introduction, but laid his hand at once upon the young n's shoulder. "Between seven-thirty and arriving

"quick! Tell me, whom did you see? What opportunities were there of stealing the paper, and by whom?"

I finished it at five and twenty past seven." the young man said, "sealed it in an official envelope, and stood it up on my desk by the side of my coat and hat and muffler, which my servant had laid there, ready for me to put on. My bedroom opens out from my sitting room. While I was dressing, two men called for -Paul Jermyn and Count von Hern. "The packet was changed, then, geone in your room, or someone who had access to it," Peter Ruff said. "How about your servant?'

"It was his evening off. I let him put out my things and go at seven o'clock." "You must tell me the nature of the contents of the packet," Peter Ruff declared. "Don't hesitate. You must do it. Remember the alternative." The young man did hesitate for several nents, but a glance into his sister's appealing face decided him

"It was our official reply to a secret communication from Russia respectingcertain matter in the Balkans." Peter Ruff nodded.

'Where is Count von Hern?" he asked

'Inside, dancing "I must use a telephone at once," Peter ff said. "Ask one of the servants here where I can find one.'

PETER RUFF was conducted to I gloomy waiting room, on the table of which stood a small telephone instrument. He closed the door, but he was absent for only a few minutes. When he rejoined Lady Mary and her brother they were talking together in agitated whispers. The latter turned towards him at once.

"Do you mean that you suspect Count he asked, doubtfully. "He is a friend of the Danish Minister's, and everyone says that he's such a good chap. He doesn't seem to take the slightest interest in politics-spends nearly all his

"I don't suspect anyone," Peter Ruff "I only know that Count von Hern is an Austrian spy, and that he took your paper. Has he been out of your sight at all since you rejoined him in the sitting room? I mean to say-had he any opportunity of leaving you during the time you were dining together, or did he make any calls en route, either on the way to the Savoy or from the Savoy here?"

The young man shook his head.
"He has not been out of my sight for

"Who is the other man-Jermyn?" Peter Ruff asked. "I never heard of him." "An American-cousin of the Duchess. He could not have had the slightest interest in the affair."

"Please take me into the ballroom," Peter Ruff said to Lady Mary. "Your brother had better not come with us. I want to be as near Count von Hern as

They passed into the crowded rooms unnoticed, purposely avoiding the little space where the Duchess was still receiving the late comers among her guests. They found progress difficult, and Lady Mary felt her heart sink as she glanced at the little jeweled watch which hung Suddenly Peter Ruff came to a standstill.

"Don't look for a moment," he said. "but tell me as soon as you can-who is that tall, young man, like a Goliath, talk ing to the little dark woman? You see where I mean?"

"But we haven't found Count von Hern yet," she protested. "Surely that is more important, is it not? I believe that I saw him dancing just now—there, with the tall girl in yellow."

'Never mind about him, for the mo ment," Ruif answered. "Walk down this corridor with me. Do you mind talking all the time, please? It will sound more natural, and I want to listen.

The young American and his partner had found a more retired seat now, about three-quarters of the way down the phlared vestibule which bordered the ball-He was bending over his companion with an air of unmistakable devotion, but it was she who talked. She seemed, indeed, to have a good deal to say to him. The slim white fingers of one hand played all the time with a string of magnificent pearls. As Lady Mary and her escort dr w near, the reason for the young American's annovance became clearer-his two companions were talking softly, but with great animation, in a foreign language, which it was obvious that he did not understand. Peter Ruff's elbow pressed against his partner's arm. and their pace slackened. He ventured, even, to pause for a moment, looking into the ballroom s though in search of someone, and he had by no means the ap pearance of a man likely to understand Hungarian. Then, to Lady Mary's surprise, he touched the Count von Hern on the shoulder and addressed him.

long one. The car which Peter Ruff had been following was drawn up before a plain, solid-looking house, unlit and of gloomy appearance. The little lady with the wonderful eyes was already half-way up the flagged steps. Hastily lifting the flap and looking behind as they passed, her pursuer saw her open the door with latch-key, and disappear. Peter Ruff pulled the checkstring and descended. For several moments he stood and observed the house into which the lady whom he had been following had disappeared. Then he turned to the driver.

"I want you to watch that house," he said, "never to take your eyes off it. When I reappear from it, if I do at all, I shall probably be in a hurry. Directly you see me be on your box ready to start. A good deal may depend upon our getting away quickly."

"If there's any scrap at all," he said you had better be out of it. Do as I

The motor car had turned round and disappeared now, and in a few moments Peter Ruff stood before the door of the ouse into which the little lady had disappeared. The problem of entrance was solved for him. The door had been left unlatched: only a footstool had been placed against it inside. without hesitation, pushed the door softly open and entered, replaced the footstool in its former position, and stood with his back to the wall, in the darkest corner of the hall, looking around him-listening ntently. Nearly opposite the door of a oom stood ajar. It was apparently lit up, but there was no sound of anyone moving the first floor, he could hear light footsteps-a woman's voice humming a song. His light brown hair framed a brow of distinct intellectuality beneath which his eyes of a dark, peculiar bluish gray glowed with the fire and the passion and the pathos of the creative temperament. He was apparently not more than twenty-six or twenty-seven years of age. Evelyn spoke quickly! 'You are thinking," she said, breathlessly, "you are thinking-"

"I am so sorry-I hoped you would not see the likeness, Aunt Harriet," she said. "It has often made me very miserable. There is an ivory of her at home, done by a French artist with exquisite skill. 'I know-I know that my life need not be at all like hers," she protested, "unless I am tempted as she was, unless I do the thing she did-which was simply a deliberate disloyalty to her better self. The miniature makes her seem so real. And surely," once more the voice became tremulous, "surely you do believe that one may escape her doom, and that there is happiness in life for the one who is willing-to let the half-gods go?"

"Have you let them go?"

The question was so surprisingly brusque. Evelyn was startled into a momentary confusion. Then she broke into a low laughter and responded lightly.

"I am afraid you will think I make large claims for myself, Aunt Harriet," she said. "For a while I loved the gay eretricious life we led. I went to all sorts of things. I even"-she darted a sparkling, audacious glance into the face opposite-"I even flirted once in a while. flirted—outrageously! But no one was ever a little bit deceived. And recently quite recently, it has occurred to me that if only one's house of life were swept and garnished-if only the half-gods were driven forth-possibly, possibly the gods might arrive."

"All of which simply means, my dear, that you have fallen in love." "No, Aunt Harriet," Evelyn asserted, cooly, "I don't think I have fallen in love but, oh, how I wish I had!"

Mrs. Chisholm drew herself up 'Such things should come in their own good time. I trust you will find contentment, at least, here, my child." The words were uttered with a pecu liar gentleness, and Evelyn looked up.

CHAPTER II.

CONTRARY to all precedent, Mrs. Chisholm appeared in the drawing room to receive her guests, thus assuming the duties of hostess of such an occasion for the first time in more than half a century.

A late message, telling of illness to the lady who had kindly consented to preside had brought her to a sense of responsibility. It was with a faint color and a peculiar light in her eyes that she turned to look upon the tail figure in white silk and pearls, who advanced leisurely down the length of the long drawing room just as their guests began to arrive.

"I wish you to go to dinner with my great-nephew, Arthur Chisholm, my dear," she said. "I myself have selected young Mr. Baylor, out of deference to his distinction."

a suspicion, already awakened, found instant confirmation.

In the meantime, Evelyn, seated at the opposite side of the huge round table, was apparently enjoying theroughly the society of young Mr. Chisholm.

"I had expected to have the undivided honor of introducing the two celebrities, but I am somewhat out of favor with Aunt Harriet just now."

Are you? What did you do?"

The young man hung his head. "I went to New York—and stayed there. But if I am to be regarded as a renegade, it is consoling to know that my friend Baylor across the way is in the same category. His father is a Virginian, you know, and his mother—wasn't she from your state?"

She held out an obleng envelope on which her niece's address was traced in a strong, picturesque masculine handwriting. "It has neen here, I am mortified to discover, since last Tuesday," she said, "but I trust it relates to nothing serious."

Evelyn crossed the room quickly, and took the note into her hands. As her eyes fell upon the superscription, a warm crimson flooded cheek and neck and brow, while her whole being seemed suddenly to effloresce into radiant life and gladness.

Evelyn sat down by the open window of room, her pulse throbbing in a tumult of expectation.

At last then she would have explanation full, if belated, of his absence at this most critical mement in their intimacy. Under the strange, blank silence of the last four days, the intolerable suspense, her pride had suffered.

A few moments later she was in walk-She walked far, taking an unfrequented path that led her finally into the depths of what seemed the veritable forest primeval, dim, murmurous, remote.

She was smiling a little to herself, softly, when her attention was caught by the sound of voices.

Presently she took a few steps forward.

The next moment she fell back into the shelter of the shrubbery as if struck across the face with a lash.

Far off, yet in full view, two people were sitting on a failen tree. The man was Geoffrey, and at his side was a young woman of slim and graceful figure, the pale brown hair beneath its black riding hat framing a face of cold but striking beauty. Geoffrey spoke, and the woman suddeniv harded her face in her hands, weeping bitterly.

Once more he spoke, and again she buried her face in her hands. And then, all sudden movement the woman turned a deep, full look upon the young man at her side—and, sobbing, flung herself into his arms! A moment afterward she had sprung to her feet, grasped her horse's bridle rein, and vaulting lightly into the saddle was gone.

and vaulting lightly into the saudic was gone.

Geoffrey rose—yet rather tardily. Then, with a smothered exclaimation he, too, leaped into the saiddle and was away—while Evelyn stood like one petrified.

But after the night of agony that followed, her sense of justice which, through all the long hours had lain like a dead thing before her eyes, began to revive; and she told herself with a sort of hard candor that Geoffrey was blameless.

When she came to herself she was lying in a huddled heap on the veranda. In the space of one hour the whole earth had become withered and scorched just as if a forest fire had swept it.

But gradually her natural exuberance of life and hopefulness began to combat the black despair. She rose and softly entered and closed the front door. On the morrow he would come back. Oh, on the morrow he surely, surely, surely would come back!

If only out of the great wide world he had not chosen Her—Her—Her!—the one woman in it whom she feared. Caroline pelaticid left the car, and moved with unhurried gait down a side road. After walking a quarter of a mile or more, she came to a stone gateway that formed the inclosure through the dense green of which one caught glimpses of tall, white pillars in the distance.

"How he hates me," she said to herself, viciously. "Not even to come and ask me about my father—!" Then, dismissing the subject with a sarug she pressed on.

A few moments afterwards, she stood before the door of the great white house.

She was admitted by Penclope, a comely middle aged negro woman.

"Honey, how yo' pa is," the woman demanded. "You sho do look same ez you'd been daid an' buried an' then dag up."

"He is not any better. It will be weeks before he can be well enough to be brought home—if ever."

As she passed by the great silent rooms to her bedehamber she was conscious of a momentary thrill. At least she was mistress here for a little while longer.

But once in her bedroom she produced a letter and read it again, slowly, from the beginning to the end.

It was a hurried, exuberant, boyish overflow. Presently she came to this paragraph:

"So you see, dear, it really cannot make to you the smallest difference in the world —so far at least as your relation to me is concerned; and I duresay you will still be mistress over our household. The truth is, I strongly suspect that she is not over-burdened with domesticity. You just must love her! But of course you will. No one could help it. I can't."

Caroline Delafield's face was an interesting study.

Released a twelvement's previous from her weetched roue of a husband, once more she was free—free to resonstruct, to live, and, yes to love, if happily she were loved!

Was she—was she loved? On the dressing table in full view there was the photograph of a man still young, yet curiously lacking in all that was youthful.

He was here—almost hers, and was she one to fail in anything she had once set her mind to? At least, at least, she had become essential to him.

become essential to him.

With redoubed resoluteness of purpose she now faced the future. For Caroline Delafield was one of those women in whom the love of power resides as a tremendous, devastating force, a mighty passion that sweeps everything before it.

Penelope's step was heard approaching. The woman entered with an odd little self-conscious simper. Finally she broke into a short, embarrassed laugh, which ended quite abruptly in a kind of sonorous whoop suggestive of a donkey's bray.

"Miss Ca'line," she announced, briefly and coyly, "I come to tell you I gwine git mah'ied!

she stood stock-still. In the look of profound pity bent upon her, Caroline had her ears.

"Honey, what mought her name be?" Caroline wheeled abruptly.

CHAPTER IV.

The train for some time had been speeding through one of the leveliest portions of the bluegrass country.

But though her eyes were fixed, apparently, upon the near and rapidly changing landscape, Evelyn's thoughts in reality had acater velocity than the hurrying train through the swift, onrushing succession of events which at last had brought her to the strange consummation of this, her wedding day.

Through all the excitement and stress and felicitation of the day she had walked a serene and beautiful figure in white satin and old lace, apparently at peace with herself and with all the world. Not once had she faltered in her part. One would have said that she was wholly satisfied.

Once more she was allowed herself a brief survey of the past three years—the years that separated her from that fatal night when she had broken with Geoffrey. Several moments had passed since her husband asked her a direct question, which was still unanswered.

He watched her. He was a siender, boy-

He watched her. He was a siender, boy-ish-looking person of the blonde type, whole thin aristocratic features reflected not only an extreme sensitivity, but also a lost desightful Joyousness of temper. His years, which, all told, aid not number more than twenty-seven, sat upon him most lightly. One knew by a mere glance into the sunny, pleasant face, that whatever mental ability he possessed was still held in a sort of abeyance, while his cheerful, faun-like nature, refusing to be trammeled, gave only a sparse attention to the dull ed, gave only a sparse attention to the dull routine of daily work.

They had met at a camp in the Adirondacks, and there had followed one of those sudden, tumultuous, and wholly inconsequent courtships.

The boy's impetuosity had simply swept her off her feet. She persuaded herself that in his adoration of her and in his mai sweetness and generosity of temper she was to find at last that happiness for which she still with imploring hands wildly reached. She believed she had forgotten Geoffrey. Once more she told herself that she was going to be happy.

"To think that six weeks ago I had never even seen you!" he whispered. "Don't—please do not think of anything sorrowful today. The rest of them back there will be able to manage somehow to do without you, but I—I just had to have you, you know."

He laughed shortly. "She will probably marry. Not that she would be quick to tell me." The train slowed into the station. "Is the next station Lexington." she asked, quickly.

It had all happened so quickly. They had assed so silently—the strange group—like passed so shently—the strange group—like figures moving in a pantomime.

Alfred's brisk and cheery voice as he sprang into the limousine sounded to her oddly unfamiliar. "Sorry to keep you waiting, but—Baylor, Geoffrey Baylor—wanted to speak to me. Somehow I missed him though. By the way, I am eager to know what you will think of Baylor."

"I have met him."

"I have met him."
"Met him, have you?" he asked, as he raised his head. "How long ago?"

"Three years."
"Oh—three years! Then you may as well say that you don't know Baylor. The fellow's fearfully changed. I have known him always. His mother was a younger sister of Colonel Douglas, the neighbor I mentioned. It is rather due to my own skill as a meddler that he is there at present. The colonel is a de-cidedly crochety sort, and—"

Young Merriweather, pleased to find that he had mentioned a subject that interested her, went on garrulously.

"The old colonel proposed to Geoff, just after Colonel Baylor's colossal failure and death in New York, to come to Kentucky. The old fellow's got quite a considerable estate, and he wanted to make Geoffrey his heir. Baylor declined, it angered the old gentleman and he refused to have his nephew's name mentioned even in his presence—for nearly three years."

paused a moment. "In the meantime Geoffrey was having hard lines in New York. His drama you know he is a sort of poet fellow" she shuddered "his drama had fail-ed to find a public; the magazine on which he held a position was slowly, but surely, going under; and worse than all, his health had completely gone to smash. When I discovered him at last—I found him reduced to a state of actual want, and just barely alive after a long and, serious illness of typhoid fever. Then you should have seen me presenting his case to the old colone!"

"Re—he relented?"
"Re-he relented?"
"Relented! Bless you! He took the next train for New York, and Geoffrey, too ill to make much resistance, was foreibly re-moved and brought to Kentucky."

"How long has he been here?" she asked

"How long -?" he asked, and paused, uncertain. "Oh, not very long, just a few months. He and Caroline are much together. Sne seems to be rousing old ambitions in him. I hear he is beginning to write again." A curious pallor had swept to her brow. All at once he perceived the change in her. "Darling, how ill and tired you look!" he cried, distressedly. "But we'll be at home in less than five minutes now. Here, just here.

ess than five minutes now. Here, just here you get the first glimpse of your home. I hope you are going to care for it," he said, thrilling under a sense of deep love of the soil, particularly when in the presence of his ancestral acres, that every Kentuckian feels.

Evelyn stood with a curious hesitancy on the threshold of the bed-chamber. The strained look in her eyes had deepened. Her breath was coming strangely.

"Honey," Penelope was saying urgently, "I'm gwine push dat couch up long side de winder, an' I'm gwine shet de doo', an' pull down de blin's, an' I ain' gwine let nobody git in heah tell-de big clock say hit's seven. Penelope stood a moment, smiling down upon the beautiful spent figure. Then she left. When the door closed at last Evelyn sat up. During the moment the negress had lingered to deliver her parting injunction about "de big clock on de stains" Evelyn had lain passive, in seeming contentment, even managing to bestow one of her radiant smiles upon the waiting-woman and speak-ing a few words in the pleasant, winsome ing a few words in the pleasant, winsome way she had with servants which almost invariably made them her willing slaves. But once Penelope's plump form had vanished, and the dim white room was freed of her babblings, the overcharged brain, hitherto too stunned by the shock to formulate with clearness the resolve it had been obscurely making since that awful moment at the station, once more was keenly alive, and toling with the tremendous tragic complications

From that moment, what had been pre-viously scarcely more than a blindly urgent impulse became a fixed and definite determination. She must go. Presently she was roused by a clear ringing sound reverberating through the house, and she started up bewildered!

The old clock outside was gravely striking the hour. "Seven!" she counted, aghast.

CHAP, V-The Way of Madness. It was 8 o'clock and after.
Still the mistress of the feast lingered above stairs, while below her young husband Evelyn's sudden vanquishment by fatigue—an occurrence so unusual that he could not recall having ever before seen her even a little tired, in spite of the very arduous and long-continued exertion which the two had sometimes delighted in taking togetherwas giving him considerable concern.

Suddenly he turned and beheld her standing in the doorway.

ing in the doorway.

An exclamation of surprise and pleasure An exclamation of surprise and pleasure broke from him, and he hurried toward her, his eyes paying tribute. "Darling, all this elegance just for me!" he cried And then, all at once, he was struck by something singular in her appearance—something which arrested and held him spellbound.

For the moment, in the relief which had come to her through the clear plan of escape she had been able to make during the brief.

come to her through the clear plan of escape she had been able to make during the brief respite she had had while dressing, there was mingled a pity so profound for the sorrow she was about to inflict that the words she would have spoken would not be uttered. As she stood thus gazing into his face, his extreme boyishness and his trustfulness of her pierced her like the well-aimed thrust

"No, I am with you—yet."

They were on the threshold of the softly lighted dining-room. He turned quickly toward her. "Now—and always," he whispered, under his breath.

She was never more resplendent. Her conversation scintillated. He could scarcely take his eyes from her. He turned a trifle impatiently to hear what the butler was trying to say to him. It seemed there had been a telephone message.

"Hit's from Woodford, sir," the nergo said, Alfred sprang up, suddenly paling. A mo-ment afterward he had rushed headlong from the room.

After a long while Alfred came back.
"Your father!" she said, quickly.

He howed his head. "It seems he has been steadily growing worse since yesterday. Tenight there came a bad turn. I am to take three physicians from town with me in the motor car. There is—there is very little been?"

She stood very still before him, unable to speak a word.
"Darling," he whispered, "it is terrible to have to leave you like this, but you must not worry. God only knows what is before me! Beloved, good-by!"

He was gone.

Alfred's unferescen departure had not cally altered anything. It had merely implified matters. During the time of delay before dinner she had made all necessary arrangement and preparation. Finding that there was a telel preparation. Finding that there was a telel phone in her dressing-room, she had discovered by the use of it that the train she wished to take would leave at half-past ten. Herplan was to go at once to North Carolina, to the quaint little old lady who once before had befriended her.

There was need of haste, The clock on the stairs was on the point of striking 9, and by 10 she must be safely out of the house. The stairon, fortunately for her, was on the outskirts of the town and not far away. By

Now there would be opportunity to write

Alfred an explanation. The letter was a very human document

The letter was a very human document, delicate, proud, picturesque in its brilliance, and its naive directness; and in spite of its apparent self-absorption, it rang true. It was a plea for forgiveness, for mercy.

She had come to the last page when she was startled by a long violent ringing of the telephone bell.

"Yes Dr.—Dr. Beverley. You have something to say to me?"
He had scarcely more than begun when suddenly she staggered. Alfred—an accident—the motor-car—! One of the motor party had been killed outright. Alfred's injuries were serious. An ambulance had been sent for. Mr. Merriweather would be brought home immediately. Then followed a few brief directions almost curtly given.

She was trembling as in an ague; and as if addressing herself to a veritable human presence instead of the inanimate objects about her, she kept saying over and over, the strength of the saying over and over, about her, she kept saying over and over, about her she kept saying over and over, about her she kept saying over and over, about her she she kept saying over and over, about her she she kept saying over and over, about her she she kept saying over and over, about her she she kept saying over and over, about her she she kept saying over and over, about her she she kept saying over and over, about her she she kept saying over and over, about her she she kept saying over and over, about her she she kept saying over and over, about her she she kept saying over and over, about her she she kept saying over and over, about her she kept saying over and over about her she kept saying over and over about her she kept saying over a would speedily inform Penelope, and she ould give directions with respect to a cer-ain arrangement of Alfred's bedroom, and

Once more she explained, gave her orders, and retraced her steps. She did not pause until she reached Alfred's bedroom.

On the threshold of the room she paused. Everything, apparently was in readiness. There was rowhere a trace of the letter. So sure was she that she had destroyed the whole of what she had written that it did not come to her to question the servants considered.

The fore-most machine halted. An instant afterward a stout, elderly gentleman came straight to Evelyn and took both of her hands in his,

ask you to wait."

Evelyn slowly raised her eyes to his. "Is it very serious?" she asked?"

"The case is—zerious."

It was nearly four hours later when Evelyn received word from above stairs.

From the moment when, at the solemn sound of slow-moving persons passing the door bearing thir piteous burden, she had covered her face with her hands, striving to shut out from her eyes the seene her imagination pictured, ceaselessly Alfred's maimed form had continued to come before her and confront her; and she had cowered in its presence like a criminal.

Her marriage to Alfred seemed to her

Her marriage to Alfred seemed to her martyrized mind a wrong out of which the present catastrophe had come, and one for which, in her first ardor of self-condemnation, she confessedly held herself to be responsible.

The sound of a heavy step moving ponder-ously down the stairway summoned her valiant spirit to the ordeal. She flung the door wide before Dr. Beverley's hand had touched the knob.

"You are very kind," she said, softly, "to wait to speak to me." Presently he spoke, and his voice broke.

"Let me thank you," he said, "for the atience you have shown. Believe me, this the first moment when I could come to A tear trickled slowly down his ebeek.

"Have you come to tell me that he is dying dying?" she asked, quickly.

Dr. Beverly shook his head slowly.

"No." he answered, slowly, "he is not dying—he will not die. He is not in peril of his life—God knows I could wish he were. Pardon me," he added, quickly, "but I have always loved the boy."

She looked at him strangely. "You mean—?"

mean—?"

"He may live for years—an indefinite period—in his present condition."

She was breathing quickly.

"There is no hope that he will ever be a strong man again?"

"There is no hope that he will ever walk or stand on his feet again."

She drew back as if he had struck her.

Alfred!—Alfred, with his irresponsible, faun-like nature!

"Will you tell me the nature of his in-

"Will you tell me the nature of his injuries?" she asked. It is a case of partial paralysis."

"And that means?" Dr. Beverley answered, in grim, measured tones, "that means death in life—in other words, that he is to be a helpand hopeless paralytic all his days. CHAP, VI-Evelyn and Caroline.

"I have surprised you?" Caroline Delafield's tone, was suave, yet Evelyn saw before her the same woman who with strange abandon she had seen fling herself into the arms of Geoffrey Baylor three years before.

Evelyn came forward slowly and gracious-held out her hand:

ly held out her hand:

"I am very glad that you were strong enough after your illness to come a day earlier than you intended. Perhaps you will be cleverer than the rest of us in eveding Alfred's inquiries about his father. Dr. Beverley prefers that he shall not be teld-anything distressing."

For a moment the two women sat speechless while the brain of each toiled with matless, while the brain of each toiled with matters vast and serious.

Caroline's breath came in short gasps that enraged her; that same scene in North Caro-lina that a moment before had presented itlina that a moment before had presented itself to Evelyn's eyes with such startling distinctness was once more made vivid for her, one of the actors. And again she heard Geoffrey's voice telling her of the woman to whom he had given all the passionate devotion of his young manhood, while her own heart had all at once grown wild and desperate.

Perate. Evelyn spoke first. Evelyn spoke first.
"I think I should prepare you a little before—before you see him." she said gravely and tremulously. "You will not be shocked. There were no cuts. But, oh, the utter helplessness—!" She broke off abruptiy.
"How could one help but hate the God who could deal out such unmercifulness?"
Caroline cried out.

Caroline cried out. "Perhaps when you have seen him," Evelyn murmured, low under her breath, "you will understand why one does not any longer hate

"On the contrary, he particularly requested that he be unmelested for a little while—otherwise I should have remained with Caroline changed the subject abruptly, at the same time stifling a yawn.

"Would you mind telling me something of the persons—numerically considered — who have been, as old Colonel Douglas would say, to pay their respects? Of course you keep the cards?"

When the cards were finally brought CaroWhen the cards were finally brought Carowith When the cards were finally brought Caroline bent over the package which supplemented those upon the little silver tray with a strange eagerness. She then asked quite casually if Evelyn had seen any of the very old friends who had called.

"Only one person," she made answer, "a lovely white-haired old lady."

Caroline looked up. "Was she soft and white, with a cheerful, comfortable sort of philosophy, and a reminiscent equator?

Then, that was surely our old cousin, Mrs.
Mary Madison, and it was well for you that Colonel Marshal Douglas—our neighbor across the way—was not also possessed of a desire to press your hand at the same time and moment, else you might have had a somewhat exciting scene to witness. He chanced to meet her here once. It is the one time he has been known to speak to her for more of the committee of Cornical Cornic than fifty years. It seems"—and Carol o raised her eyes and looked with acute directness into Evelyn's face—"it seems she was engaged to him in their youth, but for some reason broke with him—with the result that the colonel attempted to blow his brains out.

He developed into a confirmed old bachelor and cynic, and he continues a women-hater unto this day. Our modern young men take such mishaps more lightly. They are apt to be-lieve that if one woman fails them, another, and perhaps a far more desirable one, is still to be had."

There was a knock at the door, and the nurse appeared. Evelyn rose and crossed the room quickly. "Parton me if I leave you abreedly," she explained, "but Alfred needs me."

For Alfred it is pity—just pity," Caroline cried out to herself, while her hands clasped and unclasped, "I feel—I feel she still loves Geoffrey."

Up the long avenue leading to the Merriweather abode old Col. Marshall Douglas came walking slowly. Goeffrey, it appeared, was about to fail him—for love of a woman.
And for such a woman! "A scheming, selfseeking jade," as he was wont to describe herin his thoughts.

But he was as yet still painfully in the dark as to Goeffrey's actual relation to the woman he despised. The colonel had finally determined to investigate for himself.
All at once, he saw the objects of his

"But pardon me," he said, "I digress. Allow me to reveal at once the object of my call. I have come to confer with you upon a very delicate matter—a matter that concerns my young nephew, Geoffrey Baylor, and your sister-in-law, Mrs. Caroline Delafield." Evelyn paled.

He waited an instant, and began again. "The present crisis is one that requires to be managed delicately—most delicately." "What is it that you wish," she asked, huskily.
The colonel's reply was brief and directly

"I wish you to make clear to Mrs. Delafield that my estate, which I have recently willed to my nephew, Goeffrey Baylor, will be be-stowed only upon a definitely fixed condition." "And that condition—?"
"That condition is that he shall not marry Mrs. Caroline Delafield."

"Possibly—just possibly, you are making a mistake," Evelyn replied, "and there may be nothing—nothing at all serious between the two. Are you sure that this is not merely suspicion?"

The girl mounted her horse and was off. Evelyn sat, staring into the distance.

Night had descended suddenly. She heard footsteps and something told her that the man approaching in the gloom-haunted wood was Geothrey, with a preoccupied air and in evident haste, reached the spot near where she sat and apssed her by unneeding. Suddenly, she leaned forward, crying: "Geoffrey!"

"Geoffrey!"
With a quick, sob-like cry that voiced in its wild appeal all the unconscious clinging of her tortured soul to a tie that she herself had severed, his name broke from her.

on the same afternoon Maria Douglas, having consented to take upon herself a general responsibility in relation to a dinner that Geoffrey had arranged for that evening, found herself decidedly in a dilemma. Considerably to her surprise when she returned shortly after midday the discovery had been made that Colonel Douglas was still unaware of the fact that Mrs. Delafield was to be among the guests he was expected to receive.

It and been obviously impossible to discuss the subject freely with Geoffrey. That he was to a large extent ignorant of his uncle's deep and implacable dislike of Mrs. Delafield she well knew.

But when Colonel Douglas unexpectedly came into the room the girl had reached her decision.

"By the way, won't you take a look at these place cards? I painted them mysel?"

"Have I not sufficiently apologized?"
Aifred cut in gayly.
"See here, now, you two. Don't stop to abble. Let's begin to play. Remember my thought possibly the announcement might interest you."

Caroline handed the cards to Ascot.

"It would be better to have one heart in the right place, wouldn't it?" he demanded, asdained to take even the smallest notice.

Lelieve we are fairly well matched," remarked Alfred, presently, as the cards were being dealt. "But you needn't," he added with a ned to Caroline, "be quite so cock-sure of winning this time. Old Hugh over there can play to beat the band, and Evelyn isn't haif a bad player, even though she does detest bridge."

At one or two brimant plays from Evelyn, cleverly followed up by Ascot, Carolyn suddenly bit her lips and lowered her head. The situation had narrowed itself down strangely. It was not an ordinary contest in skill. It was to be a fight for domination, a combat between herself and Evelyn!

was to be a fight for domination, a compat between herself and Evelyn!

Presently Hugh Ascot, at a moment's intermission, titted back his chair and laughed upreariously, being in the best of spirits and moreover flushed with victory. Instantly there was a slight constraint, and Alfred quickly leaned forward and spoke to Evelyn.

"Did the walk tire you, dearest? You look on ale."

Caroline turned her head. "You are not a very rapid walker, are you?" she said, at lengt1.
"I?" Evelyn asked, innocently. "Oh, yes, ordinarily. Why?"

"I noticed from my window you and Mr. aylor as you came strolling in. One might Baylor as you came strolling in. One might have taken you for a pair of lovers."

Alfred's eyes opened wide. "Oh, were you with Baylor, Evelya? Why on earth didn't you bring him in? I'm so glad he found you Evelyn's voice was entirely controlled.

"He was passing through. It was late, and seems I had done a rather indiscreet thing." "One "Undoubtedly," responded Caroline. "One

"Undoubtedly," responded Caroline. "One never goes there after nightfall."
"It was quite early when I went, and I simply forgot to come back, that is all," said Evelyn with a quiet dignity.
Once more they began to play. For the next half hour Alfred and Caroline were the winners, and upon the invalid's face there had come a flush of pleased excitement. Caroline had grown deadly pale. She watched the clock.

In the midst of much that was purely technical in the magazine article one thing stood out; the verdict of failure.

But the reader was left not without hope. One day, it was declared, the admirers of Geoffrey Baylor, who had predicted great things for the author, would see their prophecy fulfilled. Caroline had grown deadly pale. She watened the clock.

"I think Alfred might stay for a quarter of ah hour longer than usual," she said. "You know we couldn't begin tonight until after 8."

"We must stop at half-past 9." Evelyn's voice, very low yet firm. "I promised Dr. Beverley that Alfred should never play later than half-past 9," she added.

Alfred spoke quickly:
"It seems that 1 am not to have much to say to all this," he said, with a disconcerting smile, "and as for old Hugh, he also is evidently not in it." Then he added stanchly, "But we'll yield to Evelyn. We'll stop—when the clock strikes the half hour."
"Beaten, by Jupiter!" Alfred suddenly ex-

"Beaten, by Jupiter!" Alfred suddenly exclaimed as the game erded. Caroline, very white and still, rose slowly from the table.
"What shall I read to you?"

He had been made comfortable for the night, and Evelyn in a loose pink gown of soft silk and lace stood at his bedside.

She had flushed painfully at the look he her. She spoke quickly and embar-

He answered almost irritably. "Oh, hang Beverley! How would he feel to be—like this? How would any man feel?"

His face, flushed and mutinous, all at once His face, flushed and mutinous, all at once reflected a change of expression. "Say, did you happen to watch Caroline?" He laughed again. "Ascet would suit her a whole lot better than Baylor. He broke into a laugh. "Well, if you want to make me go to sleep there's a copy of Geoffrey's 'Psyche' there, or ought to be. Suppose you bring that."
"It isn't here."

"Never mind." He pondered a moment.
"Is the 'Tale of Two Cities' there?"

Evelyn took the book from the shelf. Gradually his eyelids began to droop. He opened them and looked unsteadily at her. "Evelyn, will you kiss me?" he said. "I think I am going to sleep pretty soon. Stay with me a little while longer."

There were tears in his eyes, but through them he smiled bravely up at her.

She bent down and kissed him reverently on the brow, and her own tears mingled with Presently the clock in the hall struck 12. Presently the clock in the hall struck 12. Stiff and wearied, she rose.

As she approached Caroline's apartments, she was surprised to find the door of the latter's bedroom slightly ajar and here lights still burning. Evelyn moved softly past.

But Caroline's ears were keen. The slightly open door was flung wide, and Caroline stood on the threshold.

"Won't you come in, please? I have something to tell you."

Evelyn paused. "Won't it keep until tomorrow?"

Evelyn paused. "Won't it keep until tomorrow?"

"Just a moment, please. I shan't keep

Evelyn reluctantly accepted it.

She was in short skirt and rain coat, and she were a small closely fitting hat pressed down upon her bronzo head as in defiance of the storm, her costume being a sort of cheerful challenge that was reflected in her whole aspect. In the subtle change which had recently taken place within herself her lost youth seemed to be coming back to her. He face was eager, hopeful, trusting. Her eyes were shining with a strange new luster, and there was a curious return in all her need to speak of it.

Caronne stared, wondering. Then she fixed her eyes agan on the boousheives, selected a volume, and calmiy seated herself in the large chair by the window. She laughed swittly, and with delicately veiled sarcasin.

"By the way," she said, with a giance out of the window, "d.d you say down the road, or are you going toward the town?"

"Down," responded Evelyn, turning away."

Caroline reflected, and into the still features there came a look of sinister, cold-blooded purpose.

CHAP. VIII—Christmas Eve.

Snow had fallen steadily for hours. Mrs. Madison had begun to despair of receiving more callers. Since 14 in the morning her home, one of the most picturesque and interesting of Lexington's ancient landmarks, had been gayly decked with Christmas greens, and through the greater part of the day the large frelit rooms had resounded with the pleasant greetings of friends.

On this particular day Caroline Delafield, too, had seen if during the early morning hours to make a short call. She had come in with such a took of triumphant satisfaction, that old Mrs. Madison, recating a recent rumor in relation to the attentions of Geoffrey Baylor, had immediately begun to suspect matrimonial prospects. "I was thinking—I was just thinking," she suggested, with her eyes fixed on the opposite wall, "that if you had a mind to go in another direction—to take the orchard path, in fact, I might offer you protection. Mr. Baylor is lunching with some one over across the way, and he will take the orchard path back, I am sure, as I am expecting him here at about five."

at about five."

The deliberate attempt to affront, plainly evident in this flaunting of her own peculiar right to bestow, seemed to fall upon unheading ears. Evelyn's face remained undisturbed. Her voice was entirely calm.

"I shall be back in less than half an hour," she said, ignoring everything.

It anneared quate impossible to alter that Mrs. Madison came forward with the most gracious air of welcome. But midway across the room she paused.

she said, ignoring everything.

It appeared quite impossible to alter that perfect repose of spirit which seemed to hold aer as screnely aloof from any assault that could attack her from without, as if sate were clothed in invincible armor—which, in reality, she was. Nevertheless, Caroline essayed a final fling.

"Then, later, you will come here with us for the said of the sa for a cup of tea, will you not?"

"Thank you, no," she responded. "Alfred will be just waking when I return, and I shall go straight to him as soon as I can self into something other than a mermaid."

Then she coolly opened her book.

Then she coolly opened her book.

"How dutin!" she exclaimed. "However, if I were a mermaid of your order, I should wish that 'the wild white horses of the sen' would come and carry me off, I know. I must begin and take lessons from you, cise I fear that I shall never develop into the atlant apouse you are after Geoffrey has claimed me."

But Evelyn was already on the stair, and Caroline had not the satisfaction of knowing that her remark had been eyen heard. She sat for some time when alone gazing steadfastly out of the window, with eyes wholly unseeing, however, the dreary expanse of landscape they rested upon. Her book still lay in her lap, but her glance never once wandered to it

During the brief period of her engagement to Geoffrey, a period of such peculiar storm and stress as to outweigh the emetion of her entire previous existence, a feeling, at first too vague to be definitely defined, had been slowly graying up within nest too vague to be definitely defined, had been slowly growing up within herself, until thad finally taken on a distinct quality—a quality so baldly real and so glessly resembling mistrust of her own powers that she had at last drawn back in horror and amaze in the presence of an acknowledgement as painful as it was unaccustomed.

Hitherto in a serve over the content of the presence of the pre ment as painful as it was unaccustomed.

Hitherto, in every emergency her magaificent will and courage, fostered by vanity, had been all-sufficient, and she had marched with head erect and the screne smile of the successful straight on to victory. But, notwithstanding the fact that she kept up a brave show before the world, so that even old Mrs. Madison's shrewd eyes were by it deceived, the triumph which had seemingly been hers in relation to Geoffry, and which had at first filled her with proud elation as representing the very crowning of the years, had been the very crowning of the years, had been early recognized by herself as a doubtful one, likely at any time to lose its fair proportions, and to assume an aspect too humiliating to be regarded patiently.

ating to be regarded patiently.

Perhaps the best evidence of this secret, gnawing fear was the temporizing spirit which she had manifested from the outset. Hoping that through delay not only her hold upon Geoffrey should be strengthened, but also that Colonel Douglas to some extent should be appeased, she had up to the present moment steadiastly avoided all serious discussion of a definite time of marriage.

But there had come to her an entirely altered state of mind. He had seemed particularly enigmatical, at times plunged in gloom, and again giving way to a sort of wild, reckless abandonment of mirth-in which she detected a hollow ring. Conviction was taking root in her, and she had since then been cooly contemplating the hazard of the die.

It was, therefore, due to no sudden ining root in her, and she had since then been cooly contemplating the hazard of the die. It was, therefore, due to no sudden impulse that she had begun calmly to consider the advisability of the test from which previously she had shrunk. The uncertainity which harassed her continually whenever she thought of Evelyn in relation to Geoffrey; the conviction that Evelyn had married Alfred while still loving Geoffrey; and, above all, the suspicion that her own power over the latter had been thwarted through some feeling, still unconquered, that possibly he had for Evelyn, had become almost too galling to be borne. With that love of domination which, coupled with a great daring, was the essence of her whole being, she refused positively to accept herself as other than the supreme, compelling force in his life. That assuredly she must be, or nothing; and the bare thought that she was perhaps a mere companien to that mental side of him which recently to some extent she had succeeded recently to some extent she had succeeded in arousing and stimulating, was a condition against which her pride fought hard and bitterly, howbeit it was not love on a large scale that she hungered for so much as

Despite the bruise to her feminine nature. Despite the bruise to her feminine nature, which, with the full intensity of her womanhood she instinctively resented, the deeperwound by far was to those tremendous forces within herself which up to this time had failed, but which, nevertheless, rendered her not unmindful of the fact that there was a power, distinctly spiritual, and wholly without her sphere, that yet might hold him with hooks of steel and with a persistence against which all her strength could not prevail.

Once more the coals behind the brass andirens mank noisily, and this time her absorption was broken upon. She glanced at the clock. It lacked twenty minutes of five. She rose and stood surveying herself critically in the old-fashioned mirror over the mantel, the passion in her fierce, prolonged inquiry. in the old-fashioned mirror over the mantel, the passion in her fierce, prolonged inquiry being suddenly assauaged by the satisfaction she invariably felt in the examination of her own claims beauty. Then she creased the room to the bookshelves and mechanically returned the volume she held in her hand.

As she did this, something back of the books seemed to glide gently forward and fall softly. Indifferent, she was about to turn away when the spirit of thoroughnoss which characterized her housekeeping made it an act of second nature for her to linger a slovenliness on the part of her servants in the way of dust or a mispiaced article. She speedily removed several of the books from the shelf and searched back of them.

Nothing was revealed, however, save a small volume, that, contrary to orders, had evidently been tucked carelessly away on the top of other books and in a position to fall with repeated jostling. She reached out a hand gingerly and drew it forth more occupied with the dread of soiling her slim, daintily cared for fingers than pleased at the discovery. discovery. But as her eyes rested upon the small green and gold volume her expression changed.

The book was the lost copy of Geoffrey's "Psyche" for which she had heard Alfred make frequent and unavailing inquiry, and which formerly he had kept always on his table. For a moment she held it thoughtfully in her hand, making a swift contrast as there swept over her a realization of the freshness and fire of this earlier work as compared with the despondent heaviness of his latest achievement. Then, about to find a less obscure place for it, her eyes chanced to rest upon the edges of a sheet of letter paper protruding from the leaves. She turned to it. It was a closely written sheet, blotted and blurred, with here and there words hastily erossed out, and with even the suspicion of tents—a curiously intimate and suggestive bit of writing of a proroundly sacred feeling, and placed here obviously by some untoward accident. But despite the evidence of excitement, caused by hurry or emotion, under which the missive had been penned, Caroline had no difficulty in recognizing the handwriting at once as Evelyn's.

She quickly crossed the room, holding in one hand the volume and in the other the portion of the letter she had discovered. She placed the volume on the table near the chair she had a moment before vacated, sat down, and calmly, without an instant's hesitation, began to read the letter.

With the first sentence her face paled. With the next she understood. The sheet was a thing alive and quivering in her hands—an imprisoned bird fluttering in wild despair, a human heart, naked, agonized, and throbbing piteously.

Untouched and unashamed she read, even down to the very last word, this fraction of spair, a human heart, naked, agonized, and throbbing piteousty.

Untouched and unashamed she read, even down to the very last word, this portion of what her quick mind was able to perceive what her quick mind was able to perceive was a longer and absolutely unsparing confession of a tertured soul, driven to extreme measures, extenuating nothing, and seeking to hide only its anguish—lest the hurt to another should be too great—behind a veiled and delicately guarded symbolism. In a flash everything was made clear to her. Evelyn had written this most astounding human documents they widding night preparatory to ment on her wedding night, preparatory to deserting the abode she and but a few hours deserting the abode she and but a few hours before entered as a bride, and just after Alfred bad left her, hastily summoned to the bedside of his dying father. The violent revulsion of feeling which had driven her, a woman governed by an acutely sensitive conscience, and skilled in the knowledge of conventionalities, to a step so startling could be accounted for in but one way; it must be traced to a single source, and that source could be none other than Geoffrey, the accidental and evidently unexpected sight of whom had awoke in her all the conquered passion of the past, and driven her to desperation.

passion of the past, and driven her to desperation.

Presently Carotine raised her head. Staring steadily at the opposite wall, she sat rapt in an intensity of concentrated thought, as she swiftly proceeded in her prompt unraveling. All at once she caught in her breath quickly, and slowly nodded several times. It was all entirely clear at last. Alfred's accident had altered everything. The letter intended for him on his return was, unconsciously, destroyed only in part when the shock came. In the horror and confusion following upon the knowledge of his accident, this portion, snatched up by a servant doubtless and thrust into the first volume at hand when his room was being cleared, all unknown to Evelyn had remained, later and at a very inopportune moment to come to light, when it should serve as an accusing and most humiliating witness to things hidden and inconceivably rash.

Her face had grown white and hard as adamant. There was about her the mysterious stillness of the sphinx. But out of the dark conflict of enaction which held her one feeling struggled to the surface and became paramount—a feeling of implacable hatred toward Evelyn.

The hands of the clock were moving slowly

The hands of the clock were moving slowly toward the hour when suddenly into the midst of her profuend stillness came the sound of foctsteps on the stair. It was Penelope's swift, cat-like tread hurrying toward the library. At length a voice spoke. "Miss Ca'line, is you in dar?"

The negress had paused on the threshold and was peering anxiously into the darkening room. An instant afterward, perceiving her mistress in the large chair by the window, she hurried forward, extending a silver salver.

As if events were suddenly crowding upon her with a rapidity over-taxing even to her extraordinary steady nerve, she hesitated for an instant, startled, and acutely conscious of a menace.

"You may go," she said, presently, looking up at last from the small, crabbed, but strikingly characteristic handwriting she had been studying.

As the woman disappeared she broke the seal. A painful and unaccountable trembling had seized her and for the moment the large well-covered sheet was only a blur. But she quickly collected herself and spread out the quickly collected herself and spread out the paper before her, at once stabled and roused to a tremendous rush of feeling, as soon as she had grasped the nature of its contents. "I, Marshall Doughs," she read, "of the county of Fayette, state of Kentucky, being of sound mind and disposing memory."

of sound mind and disposing memory."

Passing over numerous minor bequests and unimportant directions, her gaze finally riveted itself upon the following:

"After making the foregoing provisions, and after the payment of all my just debts and funeral expenses, I do hereby give, bequeath, and will to my beloved nephew, Geofrey Baylor, the whole of the residue of my large estate, said estate to be delivered over him upon one single condition; that he the dump-cart. Then she thrust the whole into the fire.
A moment afterward she stood face to face with Geoffrey.

CHAP, IX-The Turning.

"Beastly sort of weather!" he exclaimed, half disdainful, however, of the cold, and giving it only the curt acknowledgment of the powerful athlete who holds himself above such minor matters as mere physical inconvenience. "One is half tempted, excluding your presence, to borrow one of Uncle Marshall's oaths."

"Do it," advised Caroline, promptly, "and den't exclude my presence. It might make

It was the first reference to his art since the appearance of his latest volume. Then you do not ask me for your release?" she said, abruptly, at length, after a long

"Do you desire to be released?" His words came slowly and with evident effort.

"Is this my lover I see before me?" she inquired, coolly.

"A man is scarcely in the mood for sentiment after plowing through all that slush and sleet," he said, quickly.

"I really had meant to offer you an apology for appearing in such plight," he added, suddenly glancing down at his mud-besplattered boots. "The truth is, I was hurrying home, meaning to repair some of the ravages you see, when I passed the gardener's cottage and heard about the poor little child—that pretty one, with the big brown eyes. Some one was needed to telephone, so I came on at once in here. Mrs.—Merriweather requested it," he added, briefly, his face darkening. She started.

"Fyelpr? What on earth was abe doing."

She started.
"Evelyn? What on earth was she doing there?"

A low sharp cry escaped him. He sank to his knees beside her

The hates me, I believe, said Caroline suddenly.

He spoke quickly, but with thorough frankness, smiling whimsically again.

"Oh, it is only your unfortunate species."

She reflected a moment. "By the way, in ease—in case it should happen to be not altogether generic, but individual and personal, what, in such a contingency, would you do what, in such a contingency, would you do about it?"

"There would be nothing to do about it," he answered, readily and positively.

"Then, in spite of his objection, you would proceed just as if there were no objection?"

"I should proceed just as if there were no objection."

"I should proceed just as if there were no objection. I cannot regulate my conduct with the thought of his or any other man's disapproval. I do love him dearly, though," he added, with studden youthful shyness, "and Leannot speed lightly of the throught," and

She was silent a long time. "Geoffrey," she said, at length, very slowly and distinctly, "you have asked me to be your wife. You have done this, perhaps, without full knowledge of Colonel Douglas's deep-rooted dislike of me—a dislike that I can assure you is a very real thing. If you marry

He turned and looked her in the eyes. His face had grown white and still.

"When I asked you to be my wife," he answered, with a distinctness that equaled her own, "it was without thought of anything that might come to me through him. I expected, by my own exertions, to be able to provide what was necessary, and I still, in spite of everything, expect to do that—in one

"The child had just died, and she was offering her assistance," he answered, abruptly.

The picture of Evelyn, kneeling beside a little still form, her face glorified with its look of divine love and pity, came before him anew, and he set his teeth hard.

Caroline sat gazing thoughtfully into the embers. embers. All at once she rose, shivering a

The handwriting, imperfect, desperate, dinot immediately recall to him, as it had done to Caroline, Evelyn's gracefully restrained chirography. For an instant he studied it without change of expression. Then all at once the thing happened!

"I want to tell you that I have made a mistake and wish our engagement to be at an end." In an instant she was gone.

For a short time after she had left him there was a sound of hurrying footsteps through the house. At length the final act in the small drama of departure was at hand Caraline was gone.

Throughout the entire time, Geoffrey had still and stricken in the little room Not once had he thought of leaving it. Once himself slightly, and again from the first word to the last he read the portion of the letter which had come so strangely, and yet so surely, into his hands.

Already the experience with Caroline had been reduced to the dimensions of a mere

"You are glad?"

"Can there be atonement for—some things:" he asked harsniy.

She collected herself with an effort.

"It has all slowly, slowly come to methe meaning of things," she said presently,

"Oh, Geoffrey, I have prayed—I am praying for your soul!"

"Don't!" he cried irritably. Then he flung out harshly, "It is too late—everything is—too late! Don't try to persuade yourself that you can do anything for me—now."

"If we are to speak of these things we shall have to go back to a time long ago, so long ago, down there in the mountains of North Carolina."

"If you mean to begin at the beginning you will have to go back to a time long before that—long before the night you dropped an orchid from your hair at the feet of a dreaming boy—long before his first dawning sense of beauty, and of life and love."

"We must go back to the time of — the Vision."

Place under a weight to flatten and make firm, if de sired, or cut into two and dip in flour and then in egg and finally in fine bread crumbs. Fry in hot fat until golden brown. Serve with Hollandaise sauce.

Fried Brains.

Stand brains in ice water to plump them, after washing and skinning. Then plunge them into one pint of boiling wa ter with one tablespoon salt, one table spoon strained lemon juice and boil 10 minutes. Now slice them or break into pieces, dust with a little salt and pepper mixed and fry them in a little batter made as follows: one egg well beaten, one tablespoon flour and one teaspoon baking powder. Drop into boiling fat one at a time and fry a golden brown.

Brain Griddle Cakes. Plunge one set of brains in ice water for one hour. Now cover them with one pint of boiling water, one teaspoon salt, one tablespoon strained lemon juice and boil 10 minutes. Remove and drain off water and rub through colander. Then add eight tablespoons of corn starch and flour mixed, the beaten yolk of two eggs, one teaspoon of baking powder, salt and pepper to taste. Beat well and then stir n the well-beaten white of two eggs and fry on a hot griddle cake.

Brain Croqueites. Soak one set of brains in ice water one hour. Then put them into one pint of boiling water and boil 5 to 10 minutes, with one teaspoon salt and one table spoon lemon juice. When they have bolled 10 minutes drain and pour cold water on them. When cold chop fine and add one and a half cups cracker crambs, one teaspoon chopped parsley, one tablespoon butter and yolk of five hard boiled eggs and enough pure cream to moisten. Mash and mix the butter and eggs and add to the other ingredi ents. Salt and pepper to taste, Roll in shape and dip in beaten egg, then in cracker dust and fry in boiling fat. Drain and serve with tartar sauce.

WHY are properly fried articles free VV of all excess of fat? If articles made of flour, as friters and doughnuts. contain eggs in sufficient quantity and the fat be at the right temperature when hey are set to cook, the fat will coagulate the egg upon the outside and make covering which the fat cannot penetrate. In the same manner fat is exoysters coated with egg and crumbs.

Why is it important in deep frying to use plenty of fat? Unless there is a good body of fat when cold fat is put into it the temperature is so quickly reduced that no protecting crust is formed and the food quickly soaks up the fat. It is also important not to put too much cold food into the fat at one time.

Any mother handy with her needle can buy the patterns and make these shirred little velvet hats with the flossy brims. They may be lined with soft crepe de chine or taffeta.

The newest shapes in children's hats are so very simple that one can make them up quickly and inexpensively. One of the prettiest shapes of the season is the poke bonnet hat which has the becoming circular brim. A little flower design could be worked on the brim. These hats may be made of duvetyn, velours or taffeta.

Of course one has to have at least one tailored or plain hat and the little French hats made of velours, broadcloth or to match one's coat, has the crown in several pieces, the joining of each piece being smartly emphasized with rows of machine stitching.

A different air and style all its own is a little velvet hat with a shirred crown and turned down brim. This may be made to match one's "Sunday dress."

All these little attractive hats cost many dollars if bought ready made, but the patterns are simple and can be purchased and made at home.

WHEN choosing your autumn clothing the question arises, where is the waist line? Now that the wide waist has practically eliminated the waist line. one would suppose that its position was of no importance. Not so; we are so at customed to the long waist lines that even a normal waist line looks high. The proper waist line for a dress or coat should rest just on the hipbone while in skirts and separate skirts the waist line is usually just above the nor mal line with the lower line indicated by the blouse worn over the skirt or belt or sash girdle on the skirt itself. THE new wide flowing sleaves are meeting with marked success, but there are two things must be remembered by those attempting them. They must used in dresses and waists of very light material on heavier than crepe de chine or georgette; satin is entirely too heavy and it is never used in wool materials except in a wrap coat.

The second thought-never must it be used with a straight narrow skirt or a narrow dress. If there is any bouffancy in the lower part of your dress this new type of sleeves will appear bulky and

How to Make the Child's Room

If you don't believe this is so just watch the reaction of a lonely or discontented child to a lovely room. The sense of ownership is a good thing to develop in our state of society. The taste for beauty is satisfied. The feeling innate in almost everyone that a nook that is especially one's own is also satisfied. It is not, surely, a difficult matter nowadays to make a child's room attractive. If you haven't much money, invest it in paint and some white cheesecloth for window curtains. Paint woodwork and furniture attractively—either in white or in one of the softer shades of green, blue, tan or rose. Use a color the child or children in the case like.

Just paint will do wonders. If you can go a little further as far as the spending of money is concerned, get some washable rags in a harmonizing color, and get chintz over draperles, of a good quality, so that they will stand the washing necessary. Don't have anything in the child's room that cannot be frequently washed, for remember health is of utmost importance to the child,

As to the Kiss In Public

MEMBER that when you accept the shelter of another person's home you automatically put yourself for the time being at least on the social level of your host and hostess. This is a prerequisite of our American notions of hospitality.

To be sure, in countries where elaborate systems of artistocracy prevail, the host goes to all sorts of pains to show his sense of social inferiority to an important guest who deigns to accept his hospitality. In the Orient, this custom is ially prevalent, and in Mediaeval England—and to a certain extent to the present day—kings and nobles are expected to retain their marks of social rank even within the threshold of their raised higher than that of the ordinary guests, and they had special dainties that the host and his family did not indulge in. But in this land of ours we are never expected to do this sort of homage to our guests. If the president of the United States should horor you with his presence you could do him no greater onor than to receive him at your own board, and offer him the general fare.

When Your Host Is Poorer.

Remember this fact when you go vis humbler circumstances than yourself. Remember that in accepting their hospitality you have accepted their mode of living for the time being.

As To Dress.

It is extremely bad taste to dress more when enjoying their hospitality. If you are in far better circumstances than they. it may be necessary to wear clothes. more expensive than theirs, for you may have no others; but they should never be more elaborate. Never dress in evening dress when this is not the custom of the

When You Make an Appointment

HE really courteous person always manages to keep appoint-ments at the appointed time. Among really important persons in any community is now-adays considered indispensable to show this consideration of other persons' time. The wom-

An indulgent husband may overlook the fact that dinner is never served on time and that breakfast is a movable feast. But if she hopes to succeed in society or in club life, or if she hopes to have any part in community interests, she simply has to learn the importance of being or

There are several kinds of lateness, to indulge in which is ranked as a positive social error. Being late at the opera or theater is still something that society people permit themselves — although it s sometimes seriously disturb those of the audience who wish to be present dinner engagement is another matter.

Persons of good breeding make a necial point not to be late to church If you have ever attended service at some church where men and women of prominence-possibly of national importance, attend, you will notice that those who straggle in late are almost never he people whom you are interested in.

One of the ways that a man of good breeding has of showing his courtesy to the woman of his acquaintance is in never being late at any sort of appointment If he finds that business is detaining him phone message to her in time to prevent any inconvenience to her on account of his delay. In this day and generation business of importance is regarded as a legitimate excuse for such a change in plans. However, to permit one social engagement to interfere with a prompt appointment is unpardonable.

You'll Have to Wait.

Sometimes persons who are especially scrupulous about keeping appointments on time find that they are forced to wasts prompiness. Sometimes persons who start out with the determination to be on time lose their good resolve simply because they find others so inconsiderate in this matter. To a certain extent French people similarly show their emotions. But in England and among Americans pretty generally, such effusiveness is regarded as undignified. So it is that in a recent book on etiquette for young women, published by an English woman, we find the statement that "tears are now in bad form. Apparently if one must weep at all it should be done in private. The thoroughbred young woman no more than her brother weeps in public or before servants or mere acquaintances.

Kissing as a form of ceremonious salutation likewise has gone rather out of fashion in England; and when the Englishman finds himself in a continental country where it is the conventional way of saluting women to kiss their hands he is often immensely embarrassed. It has been said that Americans tom easier than do the English.

Portrayer of Society People Keeps the Color Pure and Uninterrupted by Any Contrasting Tones—Insists

His Inspiration Is Gained This Way.

BY MARGERY WELLS.

I asked a painter of women's portraits how he gained all the supply of vivid inspiration that helped him to make those lovely ladies look more lovely?

And he told me that the color in the rooms of his house was his chief source Can't you see me just about then fish-ing around for an invitation to visit the house? He ignored my bald and bourgeois hints, and, graciously, asked me to come to tea at his house on the lake front at Chicago to see how he had handled the important matter of furnishing his own surroundings.

Then he told me tout on some days his soul needed red, on others it cried for yellow, that on still others it would have nothing but the palest of mauves and blues. "And do you realize," he whispered, "that every one on earth is just as susceptible to color as I am, only that they are not sensitized to understand the cravings as they assert themselves. If they did understand more fully," he went on, "they would save themselves many aches and pains by catering to the demands of their color hungry souls."

Starts Demonstration.

"Well, anyway, let no show you the living room." he demonstrated practically. This must be, first of all, hospitable, and next it must be restful grays and soft greens with touches of vivid cerise and purple very sparingly applied." He had done the trick, too, it was so hospitable and so extraordinarily restful that I wanted to spend the rest of my life right there in the soft embraces of a dull green chair.

"But no," he insisted, "this would be too monotonous for you. You could only rest here. When you work you must

Then for gaiety he showed me the room where they danced—a glass-inclosed porch with the brightest of cretonne hangings combined with wicker furniture

ream and cushioned with the same stuff

His own bedroom was done to yellow with touches of black-and here he had been bold enough to do the woodwork in black, having light yellow walls and darker yellow for the furniture. The floor was painted in blocks of yellow and black black rugs scattered over it.

His daughter's bedroom, then, was a symphony in blue and silver with frilly white Swiss curtains at the windows and a ruffled bed cover to keep it as girlish as possible. But there was a fascinating silver screen, blue wall paper and silver and blue light fixings, while the rugs were blue on a light hardwood floor.

"Indeed, no," came his quick response. "There is no inspiration in brown, and if more people would get aay from it they would be far happier."

He told me-this talented man-that he had dyed most of the hangings in his house with his own hands and that much of the foundation material was cheese cloth and unbleached muslin.

"It is color-only color," he said, "that is necessary for inspiration. The material does not matter nearly so much it it throws off the right vibrations in the way

After guiding some thousands of my countrymen up the steep slopes of the mountains of Paris menu prices, I have a tremendous respect for their iron nerve and steely self-composure when examining the dinner checks. Never was a spender more magnificent than my Omaha client. He took monsieur's outrageous bill of 70 francs the dish (a total of 210 francs, or $22) and paid it with a carelss air of nonchalance, at the same time tipping everyone in the place with lavish hand.

I did not interfere. Why spoil a man's pleasure? My clients were satisfied with the dish and had money to pay. I dare say that this trumped-up dish of "tempta-tion sauce," eaten in that strange place those particular circumstances, tasted ten times as good as the real thing rould have in its rightful home that may be. You have no idea, if you have not been in Paris, of the absolute reverence which a Frenchman can feel toward a successful chef. The fabulous salaries which some of the kings of the French hotel and restaurant kitchens receive for tickling the palate of their patrons are well known. It is more than a decade now since the world-famous Frederic died at his post in that grand old Paris restaurant, the Tour d'Argent, but his memory actually lives and his influence in cookery will go on for many decades to come.

He was a brilliant figure in his piche spent practically his life, is said to be the oldest restaurant in Paris, having been established on the site it now occupies nearly 500 years ago! Little wonder, with such a ponderous past behind it. that the Tour d'Argent should have appealed to this noted chef. For he required dignity, calm, poise. Even now people speak with bated breath when Frederic and Rouen duck are mentioned. for who could carve a Rouen duck and crush its delicious body in a silver press as skillfully as this master chef of the Tour d'Argent kitchen. Such a dish, this canard presse!" cried the present chef of the restaurant in speaking to one of my epicure clients a while ago. "Such juices of the meat! Such a divine sauce, made by Frederic's

Indeed, if you will believe there Paris gourmets, Frederic Delair, with his faeyes, occupies a place in the hearts of Frenchmen just one or two notches lower than Jeanne D'Arc or Marshal Foch.
